Quarrys Cut:

Travertine Allan Pentecost, 2005-07-22 During the spring of 1960 an uncle showed me a petrifying spring near Plaxtol in Kent where twigs had been encased in a calcareous jacket. A twig was collected and having recently been given I Evans' Observer's Book of Geology by my parents I found a photograph of another petrifying spring and an explanation of its origin. In those days Derbyshire was too far for a holiday destination and I took little further interest until a research studentship with Professor G E Fogg became available in 1971. Tony Fogg had recently moved to the University College of North Wales Bangor and the research was to be into cyanobacterium mats with fieldwork along the Red Sea coast. The fieldwork never materialised but my interest in algal mats had been aroused. A chance stroll along the Bangor shore revealed beautifully calcified cyanobacterium mats and Tony generously allowed me to investigate these instead. The old Plaxtol collection was retrieved and yielded abundant cyanobacteria. It became apparent that here was a wealth of information about a rock whose formation was so rapid that the process could be studied in days rather than years, an exceptional state of affairs. A search of the literature also revealed that the rock a form of travertine had other unusual features. Archaeology and Geology of Ancient Egyptian Stones James A. Harrell, 2024-05-02 This book seeks to identify and describe all the rocks and minerals employed by the ancient Egyptians using proper geological nomenclature and to give an account of their sources in so far as they are known. The various uses of the stones are described as well as the technologies employed to extract, transport, carve and thermally treat them. Hendricks' Commercial Register of the United States, 1911 Military Geology of Truk Islands, Caroline Islands John T.
