Payer Provider Consumer Industry Confronts Health Care Costs:

Containing Health Benefit Costs R. H. Egdahl, D. C. Walsh, 2012-12-06 The springboard for this sixth volume in the Industry and Health Care series was a conference sponsored by the Center for Industry and Health Care of Boston University on June 9 and 10 1978 That conference had a gradual genesis Over a year ago we spent some time with Kevin Stokeld of Deere and Company and heard his views on self insurance and self administration as one device for a corporation to achieve better management control of its health benefit More recent discussions with representatives of American Telephone and Telegraph Company and other corporations made it increasingly clear to us that management's need for data to monitor the use of employee health benefits was emerging as a critical policy issue Subsequent meetings with executives at John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company in Boston and Mobil Oil Corporation in New York among others convinced us that simple answers would be elusive or inadequate and that there was a need for an objective and careful look at the evolving relationships between employee health benefits claims administration health services utilization and corporate health care cost containment programs Since self funding and particularly self administration represent a fundamental change in the traditional insurance relationship the conference was convened to explore the advantages and disadvantages of self insurance for employee health benefits with some attention to claims production but with special emphasis on the originating question of data for effective management of an employee health benefit Health Care Cost Containment Beverly J.
