Understanding Heart Sounds

The cardiac cycle consists of two periods: The first is a contraction (systole) and the second a relaxation (diastole). During systole, blood is ejected from the chambers of the heart and during diastole, the heart chambers fill with blood. Ventricular systole causes closure of the mitral and tricuspid valves. Cardiac sounds are named according to the sequence of occurrence and are produced at specific points in the cardiac cycle.

The initial heart sound is called the first heart sound or S1. It occurs at the beginning of ventricular systole when the ventricular volume is maximal. The S1 corresponds to a point very early in the rise of the ventricular pressure curve where ventricular pressure becomes greater than atrial pressure and the mitral and tricuspid valves close. This corresponds with the QRS complex on the ECG (electrocardiogram). On the graphic recording of heart sounds called a phonocardiogram, it is the first of the components recorded.

The second heart sound, or S2, occurs at the end of the ventricular systole, at the time of the diastolic notch on the ventricular pressure curve. It is the second of the high frequency components recorded on a phonocardiogram. The period between S1 and S2 represents ventricular systole.
