

A PELICAN BILL + POUCH BREAKDOWN

The Australian Pelican has the longest bill of any bird: ranging from 15 to 20 inches. The bill is also sensitive to vibrations to help it locate fish even in murky water.

The bill is hooked at the tip to help the pelican grip slippery fish.

The bare-skin pouch, or throat sac, hangs from the lower half of the pelican's bill. When feeding, the pelican dives under water and the pouch opens, functioning like a net, filling with water and (hopefully) fish. After draining the water, the pelican throws up its head and gulps down the fish. Contrary to popular belief, the pelican does not use its pouch for long-term storage. It is rather used as a short-term collector for food and water.

The pouch hangs from two thin bones that make up the pelican's lower jaw.

To attract a potential mate, the pelican claps its bill shut several times to create a rippling affect on its pouch, like a flag waving in the wind. Their bills and pouches also change color during mating, showing off blue, pink, black, and yellow displays.
