Precision Guided Leadership Scott W. Christie,2004-05 Over the last few years and particularly since 9 11 there has been a massive increase in public interest in the U S military More recently due to the collapse of the stock market and the ensuing scandals there has been a substantial loss of respect for corporate management What do our military leaders know that our business leaders don t Modern U S military doctrine offers a battle tested blueprint for success in business The military approach which stresses leadership alignment and process provides a no nonsense framework for planning and achieving company goals I have had two successful careers first as a U S Army officer and now as an officer in a successful public company I found much of what I learned in the Army helpful in business and over the last 15 years while countless business management fads have come and gone I ve repeatedly and successfully applied my military training to business problems Now seems like an excellent time to share this knowledge The American people know the military is highly effective They have appreciated how it has dramatically reduced civilian casualties quickly and efficiently accomplished goals and created sky high morale among its employees Books by famous military personalities are often biographical they don t delve into the operational details of military success Business readers can only guess how to apply what they ve read to problems they face in the business world During my civilian career I ve witnessed a pathetic lack of true leadership by top managers including the critical requirements of empathy for employees setting good examples and providing inspiration Corporate departments have demonstrated poor alignment with company goals instead preferring to sabotage each other s efforts And most mystifying of all large public companies with the finest intellectual talent available have repeatedly failed to create or maintain simple processes that would perpetuate their success
