

Preface

The first edition of this book, published in 2010, was based on an unpublished report written by the Social Inclusion Scoping Group of the Royal College of Psychiatrists. The Scoping Group was set up to examine the nature and extent of social exclusion seen in people with mental health problems and those with learning disabilities and the implications for the future organisation, structure and culture of mental health and learning disability services, and for the practice and training of psychiatrists. The report was published in a shortened form as a position statement which summarised the findings and views of the Scoping Group (Royal College of Psychiatrists, 2009). The evidence amassed by the Scoping Group and their deliberations were considered too good to waste and were adapted to produce the first edition, aimed primarily at psychiatrists but also of relevance to other mental health professionals and others working in mental health services. It was also hoped that it would be of value to those who had an interest in mental health policy and anyone who cared about the plight of those more vulnerable members of our society.

Included in the Scoping Group review was the full range of people with different diagnoses represented by the specialties within the Royal College of Psychiatrists at the time, including learning disability, drug and alcohol problems, children and adolescents, older adults, and mentally disordered offenders. In addition, people who have co-morbid diagnoses, such as psychotic or non-psychotic mental health conditions, alcohol and/or drug dependence, learning disability, personality disorder, and adult neurodevelopmental disorders (autism spectrum disorder, attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder), were included. The review also covered the full range of age groups and social identities: women; people from Black and minority ethnic groups; lesbian, gay, and bisexual people; and faith groups. At the time, most of these groups were represented by the various Faculties, Sections and Special Interest Groups of the College, and they parallel many groups covered in the Equalities Review (2007). Furthermore, specific groups, including prisoners, the homeless, refugees, and asylum seekers with mental health conditions, were highlighted by the Scoping Group as they are, by the nature of their circumstances, excluded by society.

The original Scoping Group report took a broad view of the socially inclusive perspective – anti-discrimination laws, equality and human rights, social justice, and citizenship – in addition to a clinical perspective. The belief was that it is only from this standpoint that the importance of social inclusion for people with mental health problems and learning difficulties, and the role that our social and political institutions have in creating exclusion, can be truly appreciated. The unpublished report's title, 'From Exclusion to Inclusion: The Transformation of Psychiatry in the 21st Century', implied that change is needed if we are to move from 'exclusion' to 'inclusion'.

The aspiration for the Scoping Group was borrowed from the Equalities Review: that we wish 'to live in a society . . . which provides for each individual to realise his or her potential to the fullest' (Equalities Review, 2007, p. 1). The original Scoping Group confirmed what was already well established: that people with mental health problems and learning difficulties are socially excluded and discriminated against, and that this remains a blight on the status of a considerable number of citizens in our society. This first edition of the book reported and
