Pfeiffer, Ivan Bodis-Wollner, 2007-11-10 Parkinson's Disease and Nonmotor Dysfunction fills a major gap in the current rapidly growing body of knowledge concerning Parkinson's disease Drs Pfeiffer and Bodis Wollner have correctly perceived that many nonmotor features of Parkinson's disease are given insufficient attention in the medical literature Unfortunately they are often also given insufficient attention by the practicing neurologists who see these patients As recently pointed out there is clearly much more to Parkinson's disease than depletion of the nigrostriatal dopamine system 1 Parkinson's disease not just multiple system atrophy is a multisystem disorder both pathologically and in its clinical manifestations This is clearly true for the various motor system abnormalities which are not fully corrected by dopamine replacement therapy strategies but also for the nonmotor system abnormalities that are the subject of this volume Although recently there has been increased awareness of the cognitive psychiatric and sleep disorders commonly associated with Parkinson's disease many of their manifestations remain under recognized and their importance in managing patients is underestimated Even less attention is paid to the myriad of other nonmotor disturbances that plague these patients For example among the autonomic disorders although orthostatic hypotension is well recognized it is usually attributed to dopaminergic medications rather than to effects of the underlying disease Urologic disorders are also very familiar in these patients but may not be properly understood or well managed Male Sexual Function Richard Milsten, 1979 Sexual

Prevalence and Characteristics of Sexual Dysfunction Among Moroccan Patients Consulting for a First Depressive Episode Fatiha Manoudi, 2017 Depression as such causes emotional and physical disturbances that affect biological functions such as sleep appetite decreased libido and lack of interest in sexual function Indeed there is a significant incidence of sexual dysfunction in depressed patients In addition depression and sexual dysfunction have a significant impact on the quality of life of couples which can be improved by managing these two conditions between which there seems to be a two way causal link Sexual dysfunction has long been neglected in the clinic of depression In Morocco depression affects more than a quarter of the population However to date no study has focused on the assessment of sexual function in relation to depression among Moroccans Objectives This work aimed to evaluate the prevalence and characteristics of sexual dysfunction in Moroccan patients consulting for a first depressive episode Methods This is a descriptive cross sectional study Were included in this study all subjects consulting for a first major depressive episode according to DSM 5 criteria from June 1st to November 30th 2017 at the psychiatric university department at Ibn Nafis hospital in Marrakech The severity of depression was assessed using the Hamilton scale The ASEX Arizona Sexual Experience scale was used to define sexual dysfunction Statistical analysis was performed using SPSS 22 software Results We recruited 58 patients 34 of whom were female They were 37 years old in average The majority were between 27 and 42 years old 59% married 81% with an average level of education 34 5% The duration of the episode was 57 days in average The major depressive episode was severe in 62% of patients According to the ASEX 77 6% of the depressed patients in sexual activity had a clinically significant sexual dysfunction The majority of our patients 60 3% consulting for depression attach their sexual dysfunction to their depressed mood either by reporting the onset of sexual dysfunction at the same time as depression 53 4% or worsening after the depression onset 6 9% The frequency of sexual intercourse with the pre depressive state was decreased in the majority of our sample Sexual desire was the most impaired phase of the sexual response 58 6% followed by excitation 53 4% and then orgasm 51 7% Of the 47 married patients more than two thirds 32 patients were dissatisfied with their life as a couple as well as with different aspects of their relationship life The majority of patients reporting marital dissatisfaction attributed the cause to the quality of their sexual intercourses rather than to their frequency or other relational aspects Sexual dysfunction was significantly correlated with the severity of depression $P = 0.031$ whereas it was not correlated with duration of depressive episode $P = 0.412$ or age or patient sex $P = 0.114$ $P = 0.202$ respectively Conclusions The prevalence of sexual dysfunction is high in depressed patients It significantly impacts the couple's quality of life Although our main limitation was the small sample size which prevented us from doing a multi varied analysis the robust nature of this study lies in documenting the initial prevalence and types of sexual dysfunctions in both sexes in the first major depressive episode unrelated to the dysfunctions induced by antidepressant drugs The early identification of sexual disorders and the consideration of couple dynamics would be two important elements in the management of the depressed patient
