Bristow, Ian Jenkins, 2021-09-05 Liminality is not typically associated with tourism even though it can be viewed as an intrinsic element of the social cultural experiences of tourism Liminality in Tourism Spatial and Temporal Considerations aims to build upon the tradition of liminality as expounded in social and anthropological disciplines elaborating on the theoretical principles and concepts found within certain aspects of the tourist journey and tourist product The emergence of post modern society has impelled a change in the tourist gaze towards a more experiential and adventuresome globalised experience An important aspect of the tourist phenomenon of liminality is where a transformative experience is triggered by entering a liminoid tourist space leaving the tourist permanently psychologically transformed before returning to normalised society The narrative provides a new perspective on the tourist experience with a provocative examination into the multidimensional aspects of tourism by exploring tourism within the spatial and temporal aspects of liminal landscapes Covid 19 has further changed the rubric of tourism Until the current pandemic tourism has basically been a fun experience In a post pandemic world however the tourist is now facing an unknown future which will almost certainly affect tourism liminality This book presents the reader with a wealth of examples and case studies closely illustrating the association between tourism and liminal experiences The geographical perspectives explore the more subconscious outcomes of destination and tourist product consumption The book should be a useful reader to tourism geography where the theory of liminality can be synthesized into tourist experiences The chapters in this book were originally published as a special issue of the journal Tourism Geographies

White Self-loathing Alison Umminger, 2004 This dissertation investigates the masochistic self loathing of white characters who feel trapped by prescriptive sex gender and racial identities I look at masochism as a pathology rooted not only in psychosexual or familial models as Freud suggested but as a disorder which also stems from larger cultural injustice and trauma The masochism manifest in writings by Jane Bowles and Carson McCullers has a decidedly racial and social dimension I examine Carson McCullers's novels The Member of the Wedding Reflections in a Golden Eye and Clock Without Hands and Jane Bowles's novel Two Serious Ladies along with her letters and the short story Camp Cataract Masochism rather than being a hindrance to well adjusted adulthood becomes instead a performance that commands attention in these texts It desecrates the bodies upon which it is performed troubles the purity of the characters whiteness and highlights the refusal of white characters to be integrated into the narrative that Freud poses or into the racially segregated and prejudiced society that whiteness upholds The purpose is not to valorize masochism as such but rather to pose an alternate reading of masochistic behavior that integrates a disaffection with racial inequality in white women extending beyond the personal familial Much of the work on the role of white women focuses on constructions of the Southern Lady or on her role as symbolic and often passive bastion of racial purity This dissertation complicates these readings looking instead at white women as active agents sometimes working for change sometimes working to secure their own racial entitlement Although many of the white characters in these novels initially resist their integration into racist social structure the majority ultimately capitulate and abandon their more transgressive identities These unsettling portraits of deferrals to homophobic and racist systems of power illuminate a troubling strain of thought useful in mapping the setbacks as well as the progress made in feminist and civil rights consciousness throughout the 20th century
