

Activity: Experiments in weathering

In this activity, you will investigate the processes of chemical, physical, and biological weathering using common materials you may have available around your home. You will conduct three short experiments. If you are unable to conduct these experiments, use the sample data provided to answer the Analysis questions that follow the experiments.

The materials and methods for each experiment are provided together to make it easier for you to see what you are doing.

Safety:

You will use common household items in these experiments, and none are dangerous. You should nevertheless always keep safety in mind when conducting experiments around the house. Even harmless small objects could be dangerous to small children if swallowed accidentally.

When you have finished the experiments, dispose of the beans and chalk in the proper waste containers. To be safe, do not eat the beans.

Experiments:

Experiment 1: Bar soap and water

Materials

- 1 small piece of solid bar soap
- 3 tablespoons of tap water
- Spoon or straw to apply the water in drops to the edge of the soap

Procedure

- Break the soap in the middle to create a sharp, clean edge. If the piece is too big or small to break, scrape one end to produce a relatively sharp edge.
- Add the water, one drop at a time, onto a sharp edge of the soap.
- Observe what happens as the drops are applied.
- After applying 15 drops, observe how the edge of the soap appears now relative to how it started.

In her analyses of microfinance programs in the global South, security moms, the murders at a Sikh temple in Wisconsin, and the post 9/11 crackdown on Muslim charities, Grewal exposes the fissures and contradictions at the heart of the US neoliberal empire and the centrality of race, gender, and religion to the securitized state.
