Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations for 2002 United States. Congress. House. Committee on Appropriations. Subcommittee on the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies,2001 The Middle-Class New Deal A. Mechele Dickerson,2026-01-06 An expansive policy blueprint for meaningfully expanding the middle class for the first time in a century The US middle class was a product of state and federal policies enacted in the wake of the Great Depression But since the 1980s lawmakers have undermined what they once built shredding the social safety net and instituting laws that virtually guarantee downward mobility for all but the most privileged How can we restore what has been lost Rigorous and highly readable The Middle Class New Deal breaks down the policies that have decimated working families and proposes reforms to reverse this trend As Mechele Dickerson shows part of the problem is that politicians disingenuously conflate the middle class with the White lower rich Such propaganda hides how state and federal lawmakers consistently favor education labor housing and consumer credit laws that erode the bank accounts of lower and middle income people especially those who are not White and don t have college degrees Weaving together the latest research with the personal stories of Americans struggling to make ends meet Dickerson provides a clarion call for political leaders to enact a bold agenda like the one that created the middle class almost a century ago

Supersanctions and Sovereign Debt Repayment Kris James Mitchener,Marc D. Weidenmier,2005 Theoretical models have suggested that sanctions may be important for enforcing sovereign debt contracts Bulow and Rogoff 1989a 1989b This paper examines the role of sanctions in promoting debt repayment during the classical gold standard period We analyze a wide range of sanctions including gunboat diplomacy external fiscal control over a country s finances asset seizures by private creditors and trade sanctions We find that supersanctions instances where military pressure or political control were applied in response to default were an important and commonly used enforcement mechanism from 1870 1913 Following the implementation of supersanctions on average ex ante default probabilities on new debt issues fell by more than 60 percent yield spreads declined approximately 800 basis points and defaulting countries experienced almost a 100 percent reduction of time spent in default We also find that debt defaulters that surrendered their fiscal sovereignty for an extended period of time were able to issue large amounts of new debt on international capital markets Consistent with policies advocated by Caballero and Dornbusch 2002 for Argentina our results suggest that third party enforcement mechanisms with the authority to enact financial and fiscal reforms may be beneficial for resuscitating the capital market reputation of sovereign defaulters

Shinichi Nishiyama, Kent Andrew Smetters, 2005 While privatizing Social Security can improve labor supply incentives it can also reduce risk sharing when households face uninsurable risks We simulate a stylized 50 percent privatization using an overlapping generations model where heterogeneous agents with elastic labor supply face idiosyncratic earnings shocks and longevity uncertainty When wage shocks are insurable privatization produces about 21 900 of new resources for each future household growth adjusted over time after all households have been fully compensated for their possible transitional losses However when wages are not insurable privatization reduces efficiency by about 5 600 per future household despite improved labor supply incentives We check the robustness of these results to different model specifications and arrive at several surprising conclusions First privatization actually performs relatively better in a closed economy where interest rates decline with capital accumulation than in an open economy where capital can be accumulated without reducing interest rates Second privatization also performs relatively better when an actuarially fair private annuity market does not exist than when it does exist Third introducing progressivity into the privatized system to restore risk sharing must be done carefully In particular having the government match private contributions on a progressive basis is not very effective at restoring risk sharing too much matching actually harms efficiency However increasing the progressivity of the remaining traditional system is very effective at restoring risk sharing thereby allowing partial privatization to produce efficiency gains of 2 700 per future household

Employment Dynamics and Business Relocation David Neumark, Junfu Zhang, Brandon Wall, 2005 We analyze and assess new evidence on employment dynamics from a new data source the National Establishment Time Series NETS The NETS offers advantages over existing data sources for studying employment dynamics including tracking business establishment relocations that can contribute to job creation or destruction on a regional level Our primary purpose in this paper is to assess the reliability of the NETS data along a number of dimensions and we conclude that it is a reliable data source although not without limitations We also illustrate the usefulness of the NETS data by reporting for California a full decomposition of employment change into its six constituent processes including job creation and destruction stemming from business relocation which has figured prominently in policy debates but on which there has been no systematic evidence

A Review of the Empirical Literature on FDI Determinants Bruce A. Blonigen, 2005 This paper surveys the recent burgeoning literature that empirically examines the foreign direct investment FDI decisions of multinational enterprises MNEs and the resulting aggregate location of FDI across the world The contribution of the paper is to evaluate what we can say with relative confidence about FDI as a profession given the evidence and what we cannot have much confidence in at this point Suggestions are made for future research directions

NBER website Tradability, Productivity, and Understanding International Economic Integration Paul R. Bergin, Reuven Glick, 2005 This paper develops a two country macro model with endogenous tradability to study features of international economic integration Recent episodes of integration in Europe and North America suggest some surprising observations while quantities of trade have increased significantly especially along the extensive margin price dispersion has not decreased and may even have increased We propose a way of reconciling these price and quantity observations in a macroeconomic model where the decision of heterogeneous firms to trade internationally is endogenous Trade is shaped both by the nature of heterogeneity trade costs versus productivity and by the nature of trade policies cuts in fixed costs versus cuts in per unit costs like tariffs For example in contrast to tariff cuts trade policies that work mainly by lowering various fixed costs of trade may have large effects on entry decisions at the extensive margin without having direct effects on price setting decisions Whether this entry raises or lowers overall price dispersion depends on the type of heterogeneity that distinguishes the new entrants from incumbent traders National Bureau of Economic Research web site Identifying Age, Cohort and Period Effects in Scientific Research Productivity Bronwyn H. Hall, Jacques Mairesse, Laure Turner, 2005 The identification of age cohort vintage and period year effects in a panel of individuals or other units is an old problem in the social sciences but one that has not been much studied in the context of measuring researcher productivity In the context of a semi parametric model of productivity where these effects are assumed to enter in an additive manner we present the conditions necessary to identify and test for the presence of the three effects In particular we show that failure to specify precisely the conditions under which such a model is identified can lead to misleading conclusions about the productivity age relationship We illustrate our methods using data on the publications 1986 1997 by 465 French condensed matter physicists who were born between 1936 and 1960 National Bureau of Economic Research web site Bank Concentration and Fragility Thorsten Beck, Asli Demirgüç-Kunt, Ross Levine, 2005 Public policy debates and theoretical disputes motivate this paper s examination of i the relationship between bank concentration and banking system fragility and ii the mechanisms underlying this relationship We find no support for the view that concentration increases the fragility of banks Rather banking system concentration is associated with a lower probability that the country suffers a systemic banking crisis In terms of policies we find that i regulations and institutions that facilitate competition in banking are associated with less not more banking system fragility and ii including these policy indicators does not change the results on concentration This suggests that concentration is a proxy for something else besides the competitive environment Also we do not find that official capital regulations reserve requirements or official prudential regulations lower crises probabilities Finally we present suggestive evidence that concentrated banking systems tend to have larger better diversified banks which may help account for the positive link between concentration and stability NBER website Monetary and Exchange Rate Policy Coordination in ASEAN+1 William H. Branson, Conor N. Healy, 2005 This paper develops the basis for monetary and exchange rate coordination in Asia as part of a package of monetary integration that could support growth and poverty reduction This could be achieved directly through coordinated exchange rate stabilization and indirectly through the implications of this for reserve pooling and investment in an Asian development fund ADF and through development of the Asian bond market ABM Macro policy coordination could be viewed as a necessary condition for further development of both reserve pooling via the Chiang Mai Initiative CMI and of the ABM The paper analyzes the trade structure of ASEAN and China in terms of both geographic sources of imports and markets for exports and of the commodity structure of trade The similarities of the geographic and commodity trade structures across the region are consistent with adoption of a common currency basket for stabilization and with an argument for monetary integration across the region along the lines of Mundell 1961 on optimum currency areas The paper constructs currency baskets and real effective exchange rates REERs for the countries in the region Since their trade patterns are quite similar and their policies are already implicitly coordinated their

REERs tend to move together This means that ASEAN and China are already moving toward integration in practical effect Explicit movement toward coordination could support surveillance and reserve sharing under the CMI and release reserves
