

MailTrack: Know when was your email read

You're probably using WhatsApp - you get two little tick marks on your message once it's been delivered and they turn blue once your message has been read. Wouldn't it be great if you could find out when your email has been read in the same way?

You can do this with a free Chrome extension called MailTrack. Once you install it, you'll get free email tracking, desktop and email notifications and a history (data is stored for 6 months).

The only catch is that there's a 'Sent with MailTrack' signature added to all your email. If you'd rather not have that, you can upgrade to the pro account for $3.50 per month. This also gives you unlimited history and the ability to track if links in your email were clicked.

Dmail: Self-destructing email

It's the stuff of science fiction and action movies - send your message (which is encrypted, by the way) to the recipient and you can choose when it 'self destructs'. After the message destructs, the recipient will no longer be able to read it - it will just read like garbled text.

Get the free Dmail (Delicious Mail) Chrome extension. The service is currently in beta stage and completely free. In every message compose window, you'll see the toggle for Dmail. You can revoke access to any mail, you've sent, at any time.

It's important to note that the recipient does not need to have Dmail installed. Once it goes out of beta, there will likely be some paid plans with extra features - a basic service should remain free though.

Mail2Cloud: Schedule your email

The free Mail2Cloud extension on Chrome adds a small button to your compose window - right next to the send button. Just compose an email like you normally do. You can then choose a date/time when to automatically send it. The Save & Share feature can make a PDF of any email and save it to your cloud storage box.

Third, you get features like email tracking and self destruct. And for anyone who's using Gmail for work, you can do stuff like set reminders for follow up email and set a timeout (be notified if an actionable email hasn't elicited a response). This is free for 10 users while plans start at $2.50 per month.

Rapportive: Get more info about your contacts

Not everyone uses a detailed signature. Rapportive is a free add-on for Firefox and Chrome that gets information like a photograph, alternate email, Twitter ID and so on (basically whatever
