Quaternary Extinctions Paul S. Martin, Richard G. Klein, 1989-01-01 What caused the extinction of so many animals at or near the end of the Pleistocene Was it overkill by human hunters the result of a major climatic change or was it just a part of some massive evolutionary turnover Questions such as these have plagued scientists for over one hundred years and are still being heatedly debated today Quaternary Extinctions presents the latest and most comprehensive examination of these questions Geological Magazine May be regarded as a kind of standard encyclopedia for Pleistocene vertebrate paleontology for years to come American Scientist Should be read by paleobiologists biologists wildlife managers ecologists archeologists and anyone concerned about the ongoing extinction of plants and animals Science Uncommonly readable and varied for watchers of paleontology and the rise of humankind Scientific American Represents a quantum leap in our knowledge of Pleistocene and Holocene palaeobiology Many volumes on our bookshelves are destined to gather dust rather than attention But not this one Nature Two strong impressions prevail when first looking into this epic compendium One is the judicious balance of views that range over the whole continuum between monocausal cultural or environmental explanations The second is that both the data base and theoretical sophistication of the protagonists in the debate have improved by a quantum leap since 1967 American Anthropologist

Extinctions in Near Time Ross D.E. MacPhee, Hans-Dieter Sues, 2013-11-09 Near time an interval that spans the last 100 000 years or so of earth history qualifies as a remarkable period for many reasons From an anthropocentric point of view the out standing feature of near time is the fact that the evolution cultural diversification and glob al spread of Homo sapiens have all occurred within it From a wider biological perspective however the hallmark of near time is better conceived of as being one of enduring repeat ed loss The point is important Despite the sense of uniqueness implicit in phrases like the biodiversity crisis meant to convey the notion that the present bout of extinctions is by far the worst endured in recent times substantial losses have occurred throughout near time In the majority of cases these losses occurred when and only when people began to ex pand across areas that had never before experienced their presence Although the explana tion for these correlations in time and space may seem obvious it is one thing to rhetori cally observe that there is a connection between humans and recent extinctions and quite another to demonstrate it scientifically How should this be done Traditionally the study of past extinctions has fallen largely to researchers steeped in such disciplines as paleontology systematics and paleoecology The evaluation of future losses by contrast has lain almost exclusively within the domain of conservation biolo gists Now more than ever there is opportunity for overlap and sharing of information

Global Environmental Change Antoinette Mannion, 2014-09-19 Now in its second edition This text has been extensively revised and rewritten to reflect the growth in environmental research during the last decade Human induced environmental change is occurring at such a rapid rate that inevitably the fundamental processes involved in biogeochemical cycling are being altered Global Environmental Change considers alterations to the biogeochemical cycles of carbon nitrogen sulphur and other elements as a result of industrial technological development and agriculture which have significantly altered the natural environment The book adopts a temporal and spatial approach to environmental change beginning with the natural environmental change of the Quaternary period and continuing with the culturally induced change since the inception of agriculture 10 000 years ago Native Americans and the Environment
