

Classification of Solids based on electrical conduction

Conductors – Metals or conductors readily conduct electricity. The valence band (V. B) and conduction band (C.B) overlap each other.

Semiconductor – Semiconductor has energy band gap between V. B and C. B. The energy band gap is around 1 eV. Hence on applying potential or thermal energy the valence electron easily crosses the band gap and constitute current flow.

Insulators – Insulators have wide energy band gap of around 5 eV. Upon supplying the potential or thermal energy current conduction does not take place. The valence electrons cannot cross the wide energy band gap. Hence insulators cannot conduct current.
