Italy in the Post-Cold War Order Maurizio Carbone, 2011-02-24 There are little doubts that Italy has attempted to play a more assertive role in the international arena since the end of the Cold War During the first forty years of its Republican history conditioned by both the polarized international context and an antagonistic domestic political system Italy delegated its main choices in international affairs to external actors most notably NATO and the European Union The transition from a bipolar to a unipolar multipolar world order provided Italy with new opportunities to pursue its political and commercial interests more autonomously as well as new responsibilities to actively contribute to solving conflicts and addressing new global threats At the same time the collapse of the traditional parties linked to the fall of the Berlin wall and the Clean Hands enquiries and the changes of the electoral law from a proportional representation into a quasi majoritarian system generated two heterogeneous coalitions which have regularly alternated in power but do not always share the same views and approaches with differences at times of form and more often of substance Against this background Italy in the Post Cold War Order Adaptation Bipartisanship Visibility edited by Maurizio Carbone seeks to explain the evolution of Italy's international action over a twenty year span 1989-2009 Three central questions are addressed First how does Italy adapt to transformations of the international system Second how does its ever changing political system influence Italy's choices in foreign relations Third how do domestic structures constrain or enable Italy's place on the world stage To answer these questions this book consists of two broad parts The first part sets the context and discusses issues horizontally focusing on foreign policy security and defense policy development cooperation and multilateral action The second part which takes a vertical approach discusses Italy's relations with key countries and regions of the world
