

et al (1998) (recycling of PET), Heyde and Kremer (1999) (recycling of mixed plastics), Nilsson (1997) (composting and anaerobic digestion), Oppenberg et al. (1999) (fats), Frees and Weidema (1998) (electricity and transports). In addition we have used several databases in Sima Pro 4.0 described in section 2.4.1.

In order to facilitate the interpretation of the results we have estimated uncertainties in the data used and the results for different impact categories, Table 2.2. These estimations are based on previous publications on rules-of-thumb for data uncertainties (Lindfors et al. 1995, Finnveden and Lindfors 1998). It can be noted that the uncertainties in the input categories (total energy, non-renewable energy and abiotic resources) are lower and it may be easier to base conclusions on these categories. Some comments concerning the estimated uncertainties can be made. The uncertainties for the input categories are the same as the rule of thumb for central, non-substitutable resources (Finnveden and Lindfors 1998). The rule-of-thumb for energy related air emissions is one order of magnitude (Finnveden and Lindfors 1998). We suggest this number for several impact categories associated with air emissions. For other process-specific emissions, the rule-of-thumb suggests a variation of one to two orders of magnitude or larger if mistakes or very different technologies can appear. We suggest a factor of 100 in most cases and a factor of 1000 for some impact categories where large uncertainties and data gaps can be expected.

2.4 The LCA-model in Sima Pro 4.0

In this study the program Sima Pro 4.0 (PRé 1999b) is used. A brief presentation of the program is given here. For a more thorough description, the reader is referred to the available documentation of the program (PRé 1999a, b, c)

2.4.1 Methodology and inventory

Sima Pro 4.0 (SP) is a product related software based on LCA-methodology. The programme is produced by the Dutch company PRé Consultants B.V. The inventory data records consist of different input and output categories. The inputs to a process can be divided in two types:

- Inputs of resources from the environment, the biosphere.
- Inputs of products or semi-finished products to the technical system or the technosphere, which are outputs from other processes

Similarly, there are two types of outputs:

- Outputs of air or waterborne emissions, emissions to soil and solid or non-material emissions to the biosphere.
- Outputs of a product or semi-finished product, which could be input to another technical system or output to the biosphere.

To document these flows for a process in SP, a process data record is used. The process data record is based on the SPOLD (Society for Promotion Of Life-cycle Assessment Development) format. The aim with the SPOLD format is to, in a standardised way, document and present inventory data. This makes it possible to exchange data between users of this format. In the process record it is also possible to make the methodological choice between allocation or avoided production (subtracted system). The SP process data records used in the inventory of this study are presented in Appendix 5.
