Eagle, 2007-03-14 Intersubjectivity refers to the motivation and capacity to connect and share one's own inner world with that of another person This book addresses the questions how does this precious human communication develop in infancy and what can or should be done when it does not develop The author presents a unique chronicle describing the day by day emergence of intersubjectivity in her infant son born with neurodevelopmental disabilities These observations are analyzed in the context of a critical review of theory and research about intersubjectivity in normal children and in children with atypical development From both sources emerges a model for how intersubjectivity develops in the parent infant interaction and guidelines for how to intervene when it does not While acknowledging the inroads that have been made in understanding this unique human capacity the author points to the questions that remain to be addressed in future research The book ends with a rare opportunity to follow the trajectory of her son's capacity for intersubjectivity over a period of more than thirty years It is addressed to theorists and researchers clinicians who work with infants and children with developmental disorders and their families and parents who want to understand their children's development The Social Neuroscience of Empathy

In Two Minds

Jonathan St. B. T. Evans, Keith Frankish, 2009 This book explores the idea that we have two minds one that is automatic unconscious and fast the other controlled conscious and slow In recent years there has been great interest in so called dual process theories of reasoning and rationality According to dual process theories there are two distinct systems underlying human reasoning an evolutionarily old system that is associative automatic unconscious parallel and fast and a more recent distinctively human system that is rule based controlled conscious serial and slow Within the former processes are held to be innate and to use heuristics which evolved to solve specific adaptive problems In the latter processes are taken to be learned flexible and responsive to rational norms Despite the attention these theories are attracting there is still poor communication between dual process theorists themselves and the substantial bodies of work on dual processes in cognitive psychology and social psychology remain isolated from each other This book brings together leading researchers on dual processes to summarize the state of the art highlight key issues present different perspectives explore implications and provide a stimulus to further work It includes new ideas about the human mind both by contemporary philosophers interested in broad theoretical questions about mental architecture and by psychologists specialising in traditionally distinct and isolated fields For all those in the cognitive sciences this is a book that will advance dual process theorizing promote interdisciplinary communication and encourage further applications of dual process approaches

Body Language Mark Rowlands, 2006 An argument that activity provides a useful template for thinking about representation and that deeds are themselves representational our representing of the world consists in part in certain sorts of deeds that we perform in the world In Body Language Mark Rowlands argues that the problem of representation how it is possible for one item to represent another has been exacerbated by the assimilation of representation to the category of the word That is the problem is traditionally understood as one of relating inner to outer relating an inner representing item to something extrinsic or exterior to it Rowlands argues that at least some cases of representation need to be understood not in terms of the word but of the deed Activity he claims is a useful template for thinking about representation our representing the world consists in part in certain sorts of actions that we perform in that world This is not to say simply that these forms of acting can facilitate representation but that they are themselves representational These sorts of actions which Rowlands calls deeds do not merely express or re present prior intentional states They have an independent representational status After introducing the notion of the deed as a preintentional act Rowlands argues that deeds can satisfy informational teleological combinatorial misrepresentational and decouplability constraints and so qualify as representational He puts these principles of representation into practice by examining the deeds involved in visual perception Representing Rowlands argues is something we do in the world as much as in the head Representing does not stop at the skin at the border between the representing subject and the world representing is representational all the way out
