Orientation and Sustainability of Agricultural Production of the Individual Farms in Romania Borbála E. Bálint, 2006 Subsistence farming a widespread phenomenon in developing countries emerged as well in Central and East European and former Soviet Union countries during their transformation process from a centrally planned to a market economy Romania is one of the Eastern European countries with a large share of subsistence farmers where the commercialization of agriculture could be a means of reducing rural poverty and increasing the competitiveness of agriculture although with possibly detrimental effects on the environment The study examines which constraints should be addressed to promote commercial orientation and how commercial orientation and ecological sustainability are related Based on an agricultural household survey in 2003 and with the help of econometric analysis the research finds that against the conventional wisdom in the current Romanian context commercial orientation and ecological sustainability are positively related Moreover commercial orientation is negatively influenced by high transaction costs related to the lack of demand from processing factories and wholesalers as well as lack of cooperation

Agriculture, the Countryside and Land Use J. K. Bowers, Paul Cheshire, 2019-08-06 First published in 1983 How had the situation developed in which agriculture had become such a creature of state protection where public money supported prosperous landowners while poor farmers received practically nothing Where the value of agricultural support exceeded net farm income and vastly exceeded the level of support available to British Steel or British Rail In answering these questions John Bowers and Paul Cheshire examined the real value of agricultural support in successive policy phases since the Second World War and analysed the effects this support had on income distribution Their thesis was that agricultural change including the transfer of land from traditional farmers to institutions and corporations was not the product of impersonal progress but the direct result of agricultural support policies resting on specious economic arguments The authors' analysis of this subject has inescapable relevance for the policymaker for the taxpayer and consumer of foodstuffs for the urban user of the British countryside and indeed for farmers and the farming lobby Agriculture the Countryside and Land Use will be an important book for all these groups and also for students of agriculture geography and economics
