Abstract- Conventional pesticides are synthetic chemicals (or agrochemicals). They generally work by directly killing or inactivating pests. Biopesticides, on the other hand, are naturally occurring bioactive organisms or substances. Biopesticides may directly kill harmful organisms, or they may work indirectly by interfering with the reproduction or simply repelling pests with substances they don't like. Most biopesticides do not provide a "quick kill", but rather suppress pests so that they can be managed over time. They also tend to decompose quickly and leave fewer residues on food and in the environment. Conventional Pesticides refers to synthetic substances as active ingredient while in biopesticides the active ingredient is derived from natural materials, such as, plants, fungi, entomopathogenic virus, nematodes, etc. Pesticides are chemical compounds that are used to kill pests.

Key words: Biopesticides, Conventional pesticides, chemical pesticides, agrochemical, bioactive

INTRODUCTION

A pesticide is a mixture of chemical or biological substances that are used to reduce, kill or protect against the ill effects of insects.<sup>1</sup> It is used extensively in the field of agriculture to save trees and plants. Fertilizers help in plant growth while insecticides act as a protection against pests. An insecticide is a substance or mixture of substances used to prevent, destroy, remove or reduce insect damage.<sup>2</sup> Pesticides are chemical substances (phosphamidon, lindane, fluoropyrifos, heptachlor, malathion, etc.) or organisms such as viruses, bacteria, weeds, insect-eating insects, fish, birds, and mammals.

In 1994, we established the Biopesticides and Pollution Prevention Division in the Office of Pesticide Programs to facilitate the registration of biopesticides.<sup>3</sup> Since biopesticides tend to pose fewer risks than conventional pesticides, Environment Protection Agency (EPA) generally requires much less data to register a biopesticide than to register a conventional pesticide. New biopesticides are often registered in less than a year, compared with an average of more than three years for conventional pesticides.<sup>4</sup>

While biopesticides require fewer data and are registered in less time than conventional pesticides, EPA always conducts rigorous reviews to ensure that registered pesticides will not harm people or the environment.<sup>5</sup> For EPA to be sure that a pesticide is safe, the Agency requires that registrants submit the results of a variety of studies and other information about the composition, toxicity, degradation, and other characteristics of the pesticide.
