Quarterly Journal of the Chemical Society of London Chemical Society (Great Britain), 1971 Record of Chemical Progress, 1967 Bulletin de L'Académie Polonaise Des Sciences Polska Akademia Nauk, 1980 Stress Signaling in Plants: Genomics and Proteomics Perspective, Volume 1 Maryam Sarwat, Altaf Ahmad, MZ Abdin, 2013-06-21 Plant diseases extreme weather caused by climate change drought and an increase in metals in soil are amongst the major limiting factors of crop production worldwide They devastate not only food supply but also the economy of a nation Keeping in view of the global food scarcity there is an urgent need to develop crop plants with increased stress tolerance so as to meet the global food demands and to preserve the quality of our planet In order to do this it is necessary to understand how plants react and adapt to stress from the genomic and proteomic perspective Plants adapt to stress conditions by activation of cascades of molecular mechanisms which result in alterations in gene expression and synthesis of protective proteins compounds From the perception of the stimulus to transduction of the signal followed by an appropriate response the plants employ a complex network of primary and secondary messenger molecules Cell signaling is the component of a complex system of communication that directs basic cellular activities and synchronizes cell actions Cells exercise a large number of noticeably distinct signaling pathways to regulate their activity In order to contend with different environmental adversities plants have developed a series of mechanisms at the physiological cellular and molecular level This two volume set takes an in depth look at the Stress Signaling in Plants from a uniquely genomic and proteomics perspective Stress Signaling in Plants offers a comprehensive treatise on the Chapter covering all of the signaling pathways and mechanisms that have been researched so far Each chapter provides in depth explanation of what we currently know of a particular aspect of stress signaling and where we are headed All authors have currently agreed and abstracts have been compiled for the first volume due out midway through 2012 We aim to have the second volume out at the beginning of 2013 Reviews in
