Population Growth And Urban Systems Development A Case Study:

Population Growth and Urban Systems Development G.A. van der Knapp, 2011-10-12 The study of the evolution of an urban system raises a number of practical questions as to the operational definition of the components of the system as well as to the incorporation of the factor time in the analysis In this chapter the focus is on the urban centres the nodes of the urban system One of the first problems to be solved now is the definition of such a node It has been argued above that population size can be used as an approximation of the complexity of the spatial economic structure of a region The acceptance of this notion makes it possible to study the urban system as a population system The analysis of the population system over the study period will be pursued from this perspective The study period 1840-1970 covers completely the industrialization and urbanization phase which occurred during the industrial revolution Over this period the spatial organizational structure of society evolved from a rural commercial to wards a modern urban industrial state One of the major events in this period of change is the spatial redistribution of the population and the population growth This process will be examined below at three levels of aggregation 1 the population distribution as one frequency distribution 2 the population distribution disaggregated into a number of size classes and 3 the individual cities which make up the population distribution

Subject Catalog
Library of Congress, The Rural Richard Munton, 2017-05-15 The rural has long been regarded as an important site of geographical inquiry even if our understanding of it has not always been treated as conceptually different from the urban That said rural research has pursued a number of distinct empirical agendas ranging from the operation and impacts of agribusiness to local resistance to global food supply chains to differing representations of the rural In doing so rural geographers have critically examined the relevance and significance of ideas drawn from numerous traditions including political economy ecological modernization and cultural theory amending them as appropriate in their search to understand the nature and trajectory of rural areas Up until the 1980s attention remained largely focused upon agriculture as the primary land use but increasingly new forms of rural consumption housing recreation nature conservation have taken centre stage as the primacy of local agricultures has been undermined by reduced state protection and new rural populations which have migrated out from the city More recently research has been dominated by the cultural turn with particular emphases upon society nature relations interpretations of landscape marginalised others and analyses of the relations between representation and practice In the last decade a more holistic view of the rural bringing together different aspects of the two previous themes has emerged through more politically oriented studies of rural governance concerned with the functioning of interest groups participation protest and the allocation and management of resources The volume is thus structured into three sections concerned with agriculture and food the rural and rural governance The great majority of the selected papers combine both empirical material often highly informative case studies and important conceptual arguments about change in the rural condition that can be linked to ideas being employed elsewhere in Geography and the Social Sciences more generally These critical reflections have been drawn very largely from research conducted in advanced economies which at least provide some commonality of experience allowing the transfer of ideas between what otherwise might be seen as very differing geographical contexts
