The Content and Context of Hate Speech Michael Herz,Peter Molnar,2012-04-09 The contributors to this volume consider whether it is possible to establish carefully tailored hate speech policies that are cognizant of the varying traditions histories and values of different countries Throughout there is a strong comparative emphasis with examples and authors drawn from around the world All the authors explore whether or when different cultural and historical settings justify different substantive rules given that such cultural relativism can be used to justify content based restrictions and so endanger freedom of expression Essays address the following questions among others is hate speech in fact so dangerous or harmful to vulnerable minorities or communities as to justify a lower standard of constitutional protection What harms and benefits accrue from laws that criminalize hate speech in particular contexts Are there circumstances in which everyone would agree that hate speech should be criminally punished What lessons can be learned from international case law

Freedom of Speech and Its Limits Wojciech Sadurski,2001-11-30 In authoritarian states the discourse on freedom of speech conducted by those opposed to non democratic governments focuses on the core aspects of this freedom on a right to criticize the government a right to advocate theories arid ideologies contrary to government imposed orthodoxy a right to demand institutional reforms changes in politics resignation of the incompetent and the corrupt from positions of authority The claims for freedom of speech focus on those exercises of freedom that are most fundamental and most beneficial to citizens and which are denied to them by the government But in a by and large democratic polity where these fundamental benefits of freedom of speech are generally enjoyed by the citizens the public and scholarly discourse on freedom of speech hovers about the peripheries of that freedom the focus is on its outer boundaries rather than at the central territory of freedom of speech Those borderline cases in which people who are otherwise genuinely committed to the core aspects of freedom of speech may sincerely disagree include pornography racist hate speech and religious bigoted expressions defamation of politicians and of private persons contempt of court incitement to violence disclosure of military or commercial secrets advertising of merchandise such as alcohol or cigarettes or of services and entertainment such as gambling and prostitution

Elocutionary Studies and New Recitations Anna Randall Diehl,1887 Campus Speech and Academic Freedom Erwin Chemerinsky,Howard Gillman,2026-01-27 Expert guidance for navigating the difficult new issues around free speech rights in higher education In their earlier book Free Speech on Campus Erwin Chemerinsky and Howard Gillman argued that colleges and universities should permit the expression of the widest possible range of views Nearly ten tumultuous years later many issues have arisen that this simple principle does not adequately address To what extent must an institution provide expensive security for extremely controversial speakers Should colleges and universities defend faculty students or administrators who find themselves the victims of social media firestorms How should they handle the expression of controversial views or the use of offensive language in classrooms May academic departments or other administrative units or an entire school take positions on controversial political issues What rules should exist around campus protests or disruptive activities How should we assess government efforts to control faculty speech or curricular choices In Campus Speech and Academic Freedom two law professors and university administrators who have confronted these questions for years draw on their extensive real world experience to help campus leaders campus communities government officials and the public better understand and address the contentious issues surrounding campus speech
