

The Promise of Performance Assessments: Innovations in High School Learning and College Admission

Roneeta Guha, Tony Wagner, Linda Darling-Hammond, Terri Taylor, and Diane Curtis

Abstract

The report on which this brief is based describes performance assessments and their value for guiding and evaluating high school students' learning, as well as informing colleges and universities about what students know and can do. It explores state and local policies that support the use of such assessments, along with emerging higher education efforts to incorporate them in college admission, placement, and advising. It discusses steps that can help ensure that performance assessments are high-quality, rigorous, and well understood and that can facilitate the use of these assessments in higher education decisions.

The full report can be found online at <https://learningpolicyinstitute.org/product/promise-performance-assessments>.

External Reviewers

This report benefited from the insights and expertise of two external reviewers: Jessica A. Lucido, Professor of Practice and Executive Director, Center for Enrollment Research, Policy, and Practice, and Associate Dean for Strategic Enrollment Services, University of Southern California Rossier School of Education; and Steven Mintz, Professor of History, The University of Texas at Austin. We thank them for the care and attention they gave the report.

Funders

Core operating support for the Learning Policy Institute is provided by the Sandier Foundation, the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, and the Ford Foundation.

If ever the time was ripe for colleges to consider admission criteria that measure deep learning and its application to real-world problems, it is now. Policymakers, educators, and business leaders have emphasized the need for instruction and assessments that reflect the complex thinking and performance that are necessary in today's world. A 2015 survey of employers by the Association of American Colleges and Universities noted that:

When it comes to the types of skills and knowledge that employers feel are most important to workplace success, large majorities of employers do NOT feel that recent college graduates are well prepared. This is particularly the case for applying knowledge and skills in real-world settings, critical thinking skills, and written and oral communication skills.<sup>1</sup>

Meanwhile, more than 900 4-year colleges and universities—believing that current tests do not sufficiently reflect these skills—have made scores from tests like the SAT and ACT optional while emphasizing the importance of essays and other work samples, plus high school classroom performance.<sup>2</sup> And research has shown that authentic measures of student work—from high school grade point average (GPA) and/or class rank to the SAT II writing test—are stronger predictors of college success than multiple-choice measures.<sup>3</sup> A recent study of 33 “test optional” colleges found that student outcomes were not undermined by the policy: college GPAs were best predicted by high school GPAs, despite wide variations in students’ test scores.<sup>4</sup>

Several consortia of colleges have emerged to encourage and help develop new methods of recognizing student accomplishments. At the same time, a number of states, districts, and networks of public and private high schools have begun to identify competencies associated with college, career, and civic readiness that they evaluate with performance assessments, which are often assembled into a graduation portfolio that documents students’ accomplishments in authentic ways. As doctoral students do with dissertations, students often defend their projects and papers before panels of judges, who rigorously evaluate them against high standards; students revise their work until they meet the standards. Educators engaged in this work believe that such performance assessments provide a more holistic and accurate view of students’ mastery of critical skills while better preparing them to engage in college-level work.

Weko,1995 From Truman to Clinton presidents have aggressively tried to expand their control over national government In the process they have vastly enlarged their White House staffs and politicized the federal bureaucracy with thousands of appointees in key administrative positions Thomas Weko argues that the Presidential Personnel Office PPO charged with screening and recommending such appointees both exemplifies and helps explain the enormous growth of presidential power since World War II Originally conceived as a small advisory group within the White House Office the PPO has grown enormously from a staff of two under Truman to as many as sixty under other presidents and now oversees nearly four thousand appointments per administration Weko charts the PPO s evolution and influence and shows how central it is to our understanding of modern presidential leadership Weko s starting point is Terry Moe s rational choice theory that it is the institution of the presidency not the sitting president that fosters centralization and politicization within the executive branch Amplifying and extending Moe s theory Weko persuasively links the PPO s explosive growth to the weakening of political parties the post Eisenhower disintegration of policy networks the growing impact of television news and the public s increasing readiness to hold the President accountable for policy failures The PPO s growth clearly has increased presidential control and bureaucratic responsiveness But Weko argues those results have had unanticipated and unwanted consequences that among other things have undermined the integrity and capabilities of administrative agencies Any improvement in the leadership of the executive branch he contends can only emerge from changes in the current institutional arrangement of the presidency itself Based on exhaustive research in White House files oral histories and memoirs and personal interviews with over 100 White House aides Weko s study provides a provocative new look at the White House Office and the modern presidency
