Kierkegaard, Communication, and Virtue Mark A. Tietjen, 2013-06-12
 Tietjen offers the kind of approach that encourages us to put the emphasis where it rightly belongs on Kierkegaard's philosophical ideas

Notre Dame Philosophical Reviews
 In contrast to recent postmodern and deconstructionist readings Mark A. Tietjen believes that the purpose behind Kierkegaard's writings is the moral and religious improvement of the reader
 Tietjen defends Kierkegaard against claims that certain features of his works such as pseudonymity indirect communication irony and satire are self-deceived or deceitful
Kierkegaard Communication and Virtue reveals how they are directly related to the virtues or moral issues being discussed
 In fact Tietjen argues the manner of presentation is a critical element of the philosophical message being conveyed
 Reading broadly in Kierkegaard's writings he develops a hermeneutics of trust that fully illustrates Kierkegaard's aim to evoke faith in his reader
 Tietjen's critique of deconstructionist readings of Kierkegaard along with an emphasis on employing a hermeneutic of trust clearly distinguishes his work from other treatments of Kierkegaard as a virtue ethicist and edifying writer
