Power and the Spirit of God Toward an Experience-Based Pneumatology Bernard Cook, 2008-09-15 In this book the distinguished Roman Catholic theologian Bernard Cooke reassesses the long standing Christian description of divine power The word power evokes the spheres of economic political and social life Cooke suggests however that the deepest questions about conflicting powers are theological and concern what Christians have traditionally referred to as the Holy Spirit and salvation He believes that the twentieth century reappraisal of the theological view of power may represent the most radical paradigm shift to touch Christianity in eighteen hundred years In present day scholarly discussions of pneumatology the theology of the Holy Spirit there is widespread agreement that the traditional description of the Spirit of God as the third person of the trinity is both inadequate and misleading Much more reflection on the notion of spirit as applied to God is needed says Cooke and the use of the modern understanding of person in reference to God s Spirit must be challenged Granted that however what would replace it There is no ready answer and ultimately one is faced with mystery But greater insight into personal communication and relationships increased understanding of the function of symbols and rituals and greater awareness of the sacramentality of creation and especially of believing Christian communities seem to open up new avenues of reflection Cooke follows these paths in an attempt to frame an experience based pneumatology offering a phenomenological description of selected spheres of power economic political social personal as arenas to perceive the agency of the Spirit
