Proceedings of the Annual Meeting Council of Educational Facility Planners, 1946 A Simulation-based Tool to Train Rapid Decision-making Skills for the Digital Battlefield Rick Archer, 2006 This report was developed under the Army Phase II Small Business Innovation Research SBIR program The Simulated Field Exercise SimFX tool was designed to help small unit leaders make good decisions while immersed in an ever widening array of information technologies Rather than focus training on the specifications and capabilities of new technologies we provide students with computer based scenarios that force them to resolve ambiguous or contradictory input from remote sensors fuse disparate sources of information filter information and manage resources SimFX exploits the cognitive realism that comes from engaging a trainee in a branching story in which the trainee must make a series of decisions that ultimately affect how the story plays out. The consequences and feedback are predicated not just on the alternative chosen but on the information sources used to make the decision. Thus emphasis is placed on the student's ability to collect and use information. SimFX consists of two components: the Player presents a scenario to the trainee and the Author allows training developers to create story-based scenarios or deliberate practice exercises. SimFX is a low cost, easy to use training tool that has been favorably received by potential users in the Army training community.
