Shiftwork, Capital Hours and Productivity Change Murray F. Foss, 2012-12-06 This volume brings together and expands on a body of research that I began in the early 1960s and have continued up to the present It deals mainly with shiftwork work that is performed during other than normal daytime hours Shiftwork is a characteristic of economic life in the United States and abroad that has increased in importance over the years according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics one out of five full time and part time employees in the United States works on shifts My interest in this field concerns fixed capital specifically changes in weekly hours worked by capital over long periods of time and the significance of those changes in the measurement of long run productivity change In studies of growth the measurement of capital input by capital stocks or the services yielded by those stocks typically makes no allowance for the changing hours worked by capital Capital services are assumed to be proportional to the stocks Consequently in analyses of output growth in a growth accounting framework the effect of longer capital hours is a component of multifactor or total factor productivity growth Monthly Labor Review, 1985 Publishes in depth articles on labor subjects current labor statistics information about current labor contracts and book reviews International Labour Documentation International Labour Office.
