Jha, Surinder S. Jodhka, 2006 Such are the constraints of disciplinary boundaries that even when scholars come together in a collective effort to analyse recent processes their focus narrows down to specific themes invariably privileging one kind of methodological or conceptual framework over others The present volume of essays the outcome of a seminar Changing Social Formations in Contemporary India organized under the auspices of the School of Social Sciences of Jawaharlal Nehru University New Delhi in 2003 represents an attempt to overcome some of the limitations of this trend While acknowledging the strengths of in depth analyses of specific phenomena there is an equally strong need to critically engage with the different dimensions of recent developments in India since independence and especially since the 1980s and 1990s by bringing multiple fields of expertise into play Economists political scientists geographers historians sociologists and cultural critics have all contributed to this volume in significant ways Taken together these essays clearly demonstrate that India has entered a new conjuncture since the 1990s quite unlike the era of development that preceded it The volume includes essays on such contested concepts in contemporary India as democracy globalization the rural urban divide the city migration the middle classes caste community and gender identities It thus sets out to name some of the most urgent sites of engagement for inter disciplinary social science scholarship today Mary E John teaches in the Women s Studies Programme Jawaharlal Nehru University New Delhi Praveen Kumar Jha teaches at the Centre for Economic Studies and Planning Jawaharlal Nehru University New Delhi Surinder S Jodhka teaches at the Centre for the Study of Social Systems Jawaharlal Nehru University New Delhi
