Red Cell Deformability And Filterability:

Red Cell Deformability and Filterability John A. Dormandy, 2012-12-06 This book is an edited verbatim account of the proceedings of the Second London Workshop on Red Cell Filtration and Deformability organised jointly by the Royal Society of Medicine and the Groupe de Travail sur la Filtration Erythrocytaire The first such London Workshop was held on the occasion of the Second European Conference on Clinical Haemorheology in 1981 and its conclusions were published in an abbreviated form The interest in blood filtration as a technique for assessing red cell deformability has continued to increase and there are now several hundred centres around the world using some form of filtration It was therefore felt that the informal detailed discussions held by a small invited group of experts from many countries would be of more general interest and therefore worth publishing This has been made possible by the continued interest and generous support of Hoechst Spontaneous open discussion rather than formal presentations has been the hallmark of these workshops with precirculation of all scientific data to the participants We have attempted to preserve this flavour in editing the transcript of the proceedings This together with our anxiety for rapid publication may have resulted in a less than finely polished text which may contain some inaccuracies The topics discussed were loosely structured into eight sessions outlined in the accompanying programme

Blood Filtration and Blood Cell Deformability John A. Dormandy, 2012-12-06 H J Meiselman From the theoretical studies of Dr Skalak it is clear that white cells can significantly influence the pressure time profile of a red cell white cell suspension and that the presence of even a small amount of relatively rigid white cells can have a profound effect on the filtration pressure during the latter portion of a filtration experiment Conversely white cell effects regardless of their relative rigidity are shown to have only minimal effects during the very early i.e. 0.2 seconds phases of the filtration process Dr Chien's experimental data support these theoretical studies in that white cells of different mechanical properties exhibit different pressure time curves pressure time data for mixtures of leucocytes show shapes which can be predicted from the behavior of relatively homogeneous cell populations The insensitivity of the very early portions of the filtration process to white cells is again reflected in the calculations made by Dr Hanss Using the nominal dilutions white cell concentrations and the total volume of filtered cell suspension he indicates that usually less than 1 pore out of 100 is liable to blockage by white cells He thus concludes that at the 1% accuracy level initial filtration data should not be affected by mechanical pore blockage by white cells Experimental studies by Dr Lowe and Dr Stuart question the WBC insensitivity of the early portion of the filtration process Using a constant flow system Dr

Clinical Aspects of Blood Viscosity and Cell Deformability G. D. O. Lowe, J. C. Barbenel, C. D. Forbes, 2012-12-06 After many years of relative neglect the importance of study of factors governing blood flow has at last achieved recognition in this volume are documented many of the techniques and the basic scientific and clinical observations which have helped to open up understanding of this highly important aspect of human physiology and pathology in recent years The text is logically divided into five sections beginning with blood cell

deformability then moving on to theoretical consideration of blood rheology followed by accounts of the interrelationships between rheology blood flow and vascular occlusion The final two sections deal with blood rheology in clinical practice and therapeutic aspects of the study of blood flow As regards blood cell deformability Section A the basic problem is set out by Kiesewetter and colleagues in the first paragraph of chapter 1 p 3 in which they point out that whereas human erythrocytes at rest have a diameter of approximately 7.5 μm nutritive capillaries have diameters ranging from 3.5 μm and chapters in section A give an account of the ways in which the red cell can undergo deformation to permit capillary perfusion and the maintenance of the microcirculation
