

BJS - Princeton project prepares papers on criminal justice system goals and objectives and effective performance measures

A primary statutory purpose of the Bureau of Justice Statistics is to improve the efforts of all levels of government in measuring and understanding crime, and in operating their justice systems. As part of these responsibilities, BJS is sponsoring a project with Princeton University and conducting a series of working group meetings of national experts to reexamine the goals and objectives of the criminal justice system and the traditional measures used to assess performance.

Prof. John J. DiIulio of Princeton University is the project director, and Dr. Charles M. Logan of the University of Connecticut, BJS Visiting Fellow, is project manager. A series of discussion papers will be published as part of the project, addressing issues related to measuring and evaluating the performance of those agencies that comprise the American criminal justice system.

Rethinking the criminal justice system: Toward a new paradigm

In the project's first discussion paper, Prof. DiIulio presents an overview of the need to complement and expand the traditional criminal justice measures of crime rates and recidivism. While these measures are important, a need exists to develop indicators which can also reflect the complex day-to-day responsibilities of criminal justice practitioners. This paper discusses a reexamination of the goals of the criminal justice system into four main purposes:

- 1) Doing justice
- 2) Promoting secure communities
- 3) Restoring crime victims
- 4) Promoting noncriminal options.

Measurements can then be developed to assess practice and performance as they relate to the relevant goals (forthcoming, NCJ-139470).

Criminal justice performance measures for prisons

A second discussion paper, by Dr. Logan, addresses a number of performance measures intended to evaluate prison operations more effectively. Frequently prisons are expected to deter, incapacitate, rehabilitate, and punish offenders simultaneously. The author identifies practical criteria for corrections administrators striving to measure their performance. An extensive set of measures for evaluating institutions is offered across eight dimensions of performance: security, safety, order, care, activity, justice, conditions, and management (forthcoming, NCJ-139455).

Additional papers in this series are scheduled addressing such areas as policing and probation and parole.

BJS participates in two conferences

The Bureau of Justice Statistics participated in an international conference, "Understanding Crime: Experiences of Crime and Crime Control," organized by the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute. The conference, held in Rome Nov. 18-22, 1992, focused on the applications of crime victimization survey research for combating crime. Proceedings from the conference will be available in 1993.

BJS sponsored a special panel at the annual meeting of the American Society of Criminology in New Orleans Nov. 4-7, 1992. BJS panel members presented recent findings from BJS statistical series and participated in a discussion of related methodological issues. The panel was moderated by Dr. Charles Wolfgang, Professor and Director of the Institute of Criminal Justice and Criminology, University of Maryland.
