

Building the HTF Story & POI Selection

Putting It All Together

When analysing the chart, read the market from left to right.

This avoids you missing key information by being too zoomed in on current price action.

Do it as if you are reading a book & building the story in your head (I would hope you read a book from left to right).

What has price done?

What swing range is price currently in?

Where are the strong (protected) highs/lows?

Where are the weak (targeted) highs/lows?

What has price left unmitigated?

Where are the mitigations (follow the S&D chains) etc....

Where is the path of least resistance?

How To Pick High Probability POIs To Look For LTF Trades In and Around

A cumulation of factors help us determine if a POI is of good quality or not (probabilistically), including but not limited to:

- Multi-timeframe structure and expectational order flow
- Premium and Discount of swing and internal structure on HTF and MTF
- HTF and MTF liquidity (inducement)
- Structure zone - the more significant the structure that the zone broke, the more significant the zone
- Flip zone - did it overpower supply/demand out of the market on the opposite side?
- Sweep zone - did the zone sweep liquidity itself?
- Is the zone a strong high/low and has a weak high/low to target or target past in the expectation it will fail and break out.

The thing about POIs is the most obvious can fail completely and the seemingly worst POIs can work.

Such is the nature of trading.

You don't need to have any technical analysis or skill to place a winning trade in the market (as a single event), but you do if you want to have long-term consistency in the market as a profitable trader.

The same goes for having the skill to identify good POIs over a long series of trades to let your edge play out.

Practice your HTF and MTF analysis skills as they're high-value skills that will help you get in at the right levels where it counts.

Watch the Weekly Watchlist Breakdown recapping all of the high probability trades for that entire week ending 5th Nov 2021:
