Wholes and Fish

Ask a young child where a fish lives, and they will likely answer, "In the ocean." While it's true that fish live in the ocean, they also live in lakes, rivers, and even little ponds of water. Wholes live in water just like fish, but are wholes fish?

The most significant similarity between wholes and fish is that they both live in an aquatic environment. Fish can live in freshwater or saltwater, depending on the species. Wholes live primarily in the saltwater of the ocean. Wholes and fish have similar physical features like fins, a tail, and scaly skin. This leads many to believe that wholes are a type of fish. However, that is not the case.

One of the biggest differences between wholes and fish is that wholes are warm-blooded mammals. They give birth to their young and nurse them to growth. Fish, on the other hand, are cold-blooded. Their body temperature changes according to the water surrounding them. Fish lay eggs in the water and do not nurse their young.

Wholes breathe air and have lungs. They must swim up to the surface of the water to get air through their blowhole, which is connected to their lungs. This provides their lungs with the oxygen needed for wholes to survive. In contrast, fish have gills. Gills are little slits on the side of a fish that allow water to flow through. The gills separate oxygen from water to allow fish to breathe.

Another difference between wholes and fish is the way they move through the water. Wholes move their body through the water with the help of their horizontal tail. It flaps up and down in the water. Contrary to the wholes, horizontal tail, fish have a vertical tail that moves from side to side.

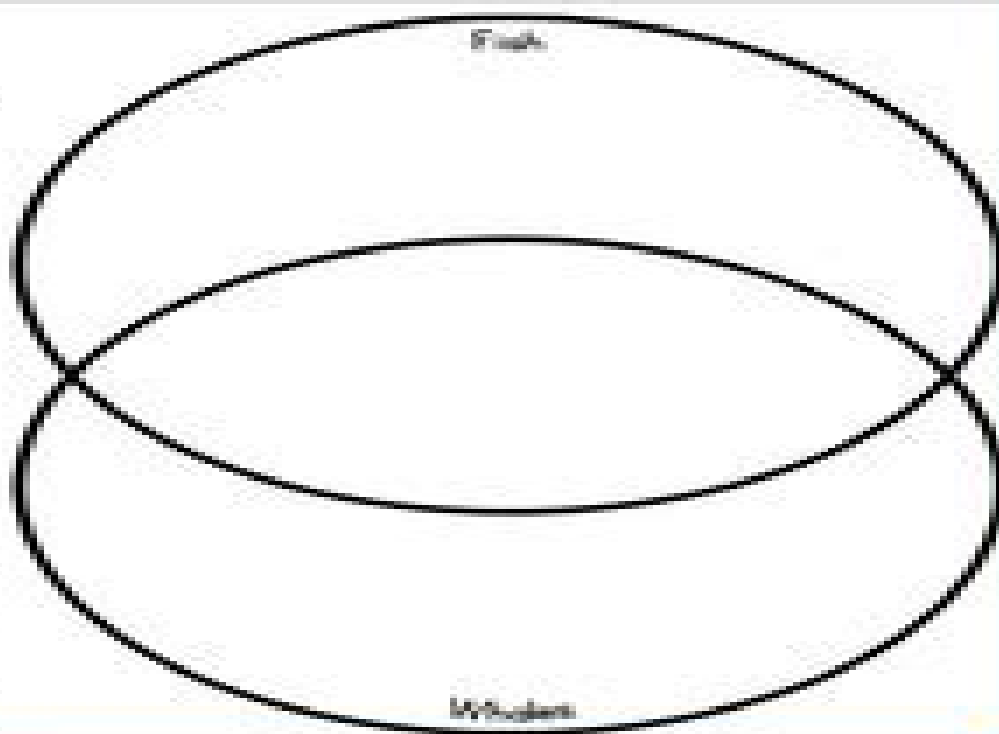

Thanks to the information described above, one can agree that wholes are certainly not a type of fish.
