Sociology and Phenomenology Sociologia e Fenomenologia

It was the philosopher and sociologist Alfred Schutz who inaugurated a paradigmatic sociological approach strongly influenced by the phenomenology of Edmund Husserl, followed by authors such as Thomas Luckmann and Peter L. Berger, among many others. This issue of Civitas discusses mainly recent developments of this sociological tradition, responsible for important influences on the contemporary sociological theory and on the development of empirical research, such as ethnomethodology, conversation analysis, socio-scientific hermeneutics and the biographical narrative approach. This special issue unites contributions that explore theoretical and empirical investigations anchored in these sociological traditions or that foster the dialogue between these approaches with other sociological perspectives.

As far as the interrelationship of sociology and phenomenology is concerned, it is important to mention that both disciplines are distinct with respect to their epistemology, methodology and methods. The sociological discipline concentrates on the analysis of concrete historical and empirical phenomena, such as e.g. power structures and inequality in specific societies, “states”, “communities” of a certain time. Sociology empirically investigates the “social construction of reality” (Berger and Luckmann, 1989 [1966]) with respect to concrete socio-historical phenomena, using diverse qualitative and quantitative methods for its research. This parts from the assumption that from a sociological perspective historical worlds are socially constructed in concrete experiences and actions (Luckmann, 2007 [1999], p. 131).

On the other hand, phenomenology concentrates on how reality is constituted on the basis of general structures of experience depending on consciousness activities. The phenomenological discipline investigates how appearances of reality present themselves in space and time to our subjective consciousness. According to the founding father of phenomenology, Edmund Husserl, the phenomenologist has to go “back to the things themselves”, that means back to the things as they are actually given to our experience (Husserl, 1992 [1931], p. 14). Consciousness is always the consciousness

Sociology, Phenomenology and Marxian Analysis Barry Smart, 2013-10-15 Sociology is an established academic discipline but there has been continuing debate over its status as a science and the nature of its subject matter This led to the emergence of a phenomenological sociology and to critiques of positivist sociology This critical reappraisal of the relevance of Marxian analysis for a science of society shows how these developments within sociology have had their counterpart in Marxism The author analyses the status of Marx's work and the Marxist tradition in sociology He focuses upon those concerns which are common to both Marxian analysis and sociology the question of subjectivity the nature of social reality and the dialectical relationship of the doing or practice of a science of society to the social world within which such social analyses are situated Originally published in 1976

Key Ideas in Sociology Martin Slattery, 2003 Key Ideas in Sociology provides a tour d'horizon of the great sociological thinkers of the last two centuries their lives their main ideas and their influence on further thinking and practice in sociology Fifty key thinkers in sociology are represented both to give a sense of history to the development of the discipline and to exemplify the range of issues that have been covered Each essay concludes with an annotated Suggested Readings list and a General Bibliography is also provided
