Congressional Record United States. Congress, 1993. The Log, 1939. Risk Management, 1980. The Insurance Monitor, 1881. Patient Power John C. Goodman, Gerald L. Musgrave, 1992. If individuals are allowed to deduct the cost of their own insurance, they will have a stake in finding the best insurance value. Most consumers will discover that high deductible insurance is a far better buy than low deductible policies because the cost of handling small claims exceeds the benefits. Goodman and Musgrave propose that consumers be free to set up tax-free medical savings accounts to cover routine medical expenses. Since the money in those accounts would be the property of individuals, they would have an incentive to spend wisely on health care. The money not spent would accumulate tax-free interest that could be used to meet health care and other needs after retirement. Thus, medical savings accounts are a way of privatizing Medicare too. The result of this proposal would be a cost-conscious private system of competition and innovation.
