

Justice and Caring: Power, Politics and Ethics in Strategic Leadership

Jeffrey Glanz

Abstract: The underlying motif of this paper is to highlight a prominent theoretical and methodological flaw present in many discussions dealing with strategic planning and research in strategic leadership in general; that is, the absence of attention to the ethical implications of proposed strategies, and the role power, politics and ethics have on leading strategically. The paper underscores social justice and caring perspectives necessary from which to frame strategic initiatives. In terms of methodology and approach this reflexive paper critically reviews and examines extant literature in the field of strategic leadership, including prescriptive strategies advocated in the field of practice. Reflection and analysis of strategic leadership, at large, forms the core of this conceptual paper.

Supporting previous research, this paper finds that the field of strategic leadership, characterised as incipient and diffused, would benefit from mindful attention to the study of ethics with a focus on viewing strategic initiatives in schools and communities from a social-justice and caring lens. Going beyond a review of the field, much of the paper views strategic leadership, in its various stages or manifestations, through a paradigm of social justice and an ethic of caring absent, for the most part, in writing and research in the field.

Introduction

Strategic leadership, according to Eacott (2008a) is a field in search of 'unity'. He laments the inattention of strategic leadership by school leaders, the lack of theoretical literature, and the emphasis 'on prescriptive writing in the field' (2008a: 353). Eacott's main thrust in his state-of-the-art conceptual paper is that knowledge has been stagnant 'because the majority of research and writing in the field have approached strategy from a narrow set of epistemological foundations' (2008a: 354). In the end, he calls for heightened attention to, and focus on, further 'empirical research and inquiry into strategy in education by suggesting alternate ways of defining and researching strategy' (2008a: 367). His hope is that others (i.e., scholars and practitioners) 'will continue to question and focus on the key features of strategy and the issues that confront them' (2008a: 368).

Eacott presents a conceptual framework for educational strategy that draws from an extensive body of literature and research on planning and change (e.g., Davies & Davies 2006), strategy in the corporate sector (e.g., Boyd, Finkelstein & Gove 2005), strategic thinking and actions (e.g., Caldwell 2006), applications of strategies in education (e.g., Bell & Chan 2005), and including his own recent work (Eacott 2008b), which analytically examines
