Konstantinidis, 2005-08-18 Dictionaries are didactic books used as consultation instruments for self-teaching. They are composed by an ordered set of linguistic units which reflects a double structure: the macrostructure which corresponds to the word list and the microstructure that refers to the contents of each lemma. The great value of dictionaries lies in the fact that they establish a standard nomenclature and prevent in that way the appearance of new useless synonyms. This dictionary contains a total of about 27 500 main English entries and over of 130 000 translations that should normally sufficiently cover all fields of life sciences. The basic criteria used to accept a word as part of the dictionary during the development period in order of importance were usage up to date, specificity, simplicity and conceptual relationships. The dictionary meets the standards of higher education and covers all main fields of life sciences by setting its primary focus on the vastly developing fields of cell biology biochemistry molecular biology immunology developmental biology microbiology genetics and also the fields of human anatomy histology pathology physiology zoology and botany The fields of ecology paleontology systematics evolution biostatistics plant physiology plant anatomy plant histology biometry and lab techniques have been sufficiently covered but in a more general manner The latest Latin international anatomical terminology Terminologia Anatomica or TA has been fully incorporated and all anatomical entries have been given their international Latin TA synonym This dictionary will be a valuable and helpful tool for all scientists teachers students and generally all those that work within the fields of life sciences
