Avian Models for Social Cohesion Andras Csillag, Gergely Zachar, Giorgio Vallortigara, 2020-02-10 Animals living in groups are often linked to group or family members stronger than to other conspecifics and form stronger coalitions often based on genetic relatedness within such groups Effective cooperation within a group requires the preference for proximity of group members suppression of aggression toward conspecifics an ability to perceive and respond to social signals and to change often synchronize behavior accordingly Birds have long been used for a number of investigations involving sensory perception learning feeding strategies and vocal communication Recently they have been proposed as ideal model species even for psychiatric disorders affecting social cohesion such as autism spectrum disorder The physiological mechanisms and neural systems underlying different forms of sociability sexual and parental bonding group preference nesting care for offspring migration can often be studied easier in birds since their social behavioral repertoire as a taxon but sometimes also as individuals is more diverse than that of mammals By contrast with laboratory rodents birds rely less on olfactory cues Rather they tend to use visual and acoustic signals for social interactions much like humans Comparative approach and evolutionary relevance of studies using avian species have already yielded valuable results in several fields of neuroscience learning and memory imprinting acoustic communication birdsong neurogenesis seasonal changes in the song network With the advent of robust novel methods in molecular biology genomics and proteomics information technology and electronic engineering and also based upon an ever improving battery of behavioral tests avian research in social cohesion has likely gained a new impetus

Reviews, Refinements and New Ideas in Face Recognition Peter Corcoran, 2011-07-27 As a baby one of our earliest stimuli is that of human faces We rapidly learn to identify characterize and eventually distinguish those who are near and dear to us We accept face recognition later as an everyday ability We realize the complexity of the underlying problem only when we attempt to duplicate this skill in a computer vision system This book is arranged around a number of clustered themes covering different aspects of face recognition The first section on Statistical Face Models and Classifiers presents reviews and refinements of some well known statistical models The next section presents two articles exploring the use of Infrared imaging techniques and is followed by few articles devoted to refinements of classical methods New approaches to improve the robustness of face analysis techniques are followed by two articles dealing with real time challenges in video sequences A final article explores human perceptual issues of face recognition
