Torn Many Ways Max Krüger, Debora De Castro Leal, David Randall, Peter Tolmie, 2023-10-09 This edited collection brings together a range of experiences from the field largely in the context of CSCW and HCI It focuses specifically on the experiences of people who have worked in difficult tense delicate and sometimes conflictual and dangerous settings The tensions faced by researchers and more importantly how they manage to deal with them are often under remarked Unlike the bulk of published ethnographic work the chapters in this book deal more explicitly with the various practical problems that researchers with varying degrees of experience face Our aim in this book is to give a voice to researchers who have sometimes contended with unexpected issues and who sometimes have had to face them on their own We explore incidents which may entail emotional conflict embarrassment and shame feelings of isolation arguments with other members of a team political pressures and ideological confusions to name but a few Senior figures in research laboratories and elsewhere may provide intellectual direction and support but may not always recognise the personal and problematic nature of qualitative enquiry undertaken by relatively inexperienced researchers The chapters examine feelings of isolation the difficulty of taking sides the negotiation of personal ethical and political pressures in the field and dealing with conflicting visions of what the research should be about The book is a resource for those embarking on the challenges of working in unfamiliar or difficult settings and moreover should act as a reminder to academics who might have forgotten the practical issues that researchers can face and how they deal with them
