

THAT ARE TRIMPHOLITICALLY FORTUNATE TRANSPORTATION PLANS BEYOND the movement earlier, the METTPE had its genesis in a statement in the 1966 Metropolitan Plan, suggesting a review of the Plan within five years.¹⁰ Therefore, the basic policy documents used by the Metropolitan Council Planning Board in its advisory role to the Metropolitan Council continued action in the wake of its own review. The transportation component of this 1966 Plan had been developed through the use of a computer program called the Travel Forecasting. As part of the overall Plan Review, the Planning Board decided to commission an independent study of the transportation component of the Plan. This "Metropolitan Plan Review: Transportation Study" was scheduled to begin in early 1971, but in June of that year, the province of Ontario conducted the partially completed Southern Expressway. The transportation resulted largely from citizen protests, and it is fair to say that as a result of the decision, transportation planning in Metropolitan Toronto was thrown into chaos for a while. It was seen by Metro as uncoordinated interference in local systems. Metro very much wanted to build the road. The upshot was that the provincial government emerged with a much more powerful role in Metropolitan transportation. The Metropolitan Council had been used for studying such decisions and laterally, but now there was a new and demonstrably very powerful actor.

The METTPE emerged during this major shuffle in political power in transportation.¹¹ Its official beginning was delayed, partly because political communications between Metro and the province on transportation matters broke down, and partly because the controversy over the road has fixed a wider study direction. The Review finally began in the summer of 1972, by which time Metro and the province were again in more cordial terms.

The basic mandate of the METTPE was actually announced shortly after the Southern Expressway, announcing that transportation component of the 1966 Plan, the METTPE was to consider the relationship between land use and transportation, public infrastructure financing, and especially transit system financing.
Public involvement was seen as important, and high priority was given to social and economic criteria.

The METTPE was set up as an independent study group under its own direction, and with staff hired for the duration and transferred from other agencies. Consultants were used as an "as-requested" basis, they did not play a major role in the Review. The METTPE reported to the Metropolitan Council Planning Board, and to the Joint Southern Transportation

Planning and Politics Juri Pill, 1979 Planning and Politics unfolds an extremely detailed case study of a single major transportation review to provide the professional reader and student with a valuable alternative to the usual theoretical planning study Transport Planning for Third World Cities (Routledge Revivals) Harry T. Dimitriou, 2013-06-26 Cities within the developing world experience a form of urban development which is different to those in more industrialised countries Rates of growth are usually much more dramatic housing and transport are often provided informally and institutional support for urban management is also much weaker The crux of this book first published in 1990 lies in the idea that urban transport planning cannot be viewed in isolation from this wider development context Making special reference to a number of countries including Brazil India and Indonesia chapters discuss problems of urban transport planning deficiencies in the theory and practice of conventional transport planning and the emerging alternatives in the countries under examination This work addresses problems that are still of great concern to urban policy planners professionals and academics as well as students from the fields of development studies urban geography and planning architecture and civil engineering The Public Metropolis Frances Frisken, 2007 The Public Metropolis traces the evolution of Ontario government responses to rapid population growth and outward expansion in the Toronto city region over an eighty year period Frisken rigorously describes the many institutions and policies that were put in place at different times to provide services of region wide importance and skilfully assesses the extent to which those institutions and policies managed to achieve objectives commonly identified with effective regional governance Although the province acted sporadically and often reluctantly in the face of regional population growth and expansion Frisken argues that its various interventions nonetheless contributed to the region's most noteworthy achievement a core city that continued to thrive while many other North American cities were experiencing population economic and social decline This perceptive and comprehensive examination of issues related to the evolution of city regions is critical reading not only for those teaching and researching in the field but also for city and regional planners officials at all levels of government and urban historians The research writing and publication of this book has been supported by the Neptis Foundation The Changing Social Geography of Canadian Cities Larry S. Bourne, David Ley, 1993 The contributors to this volume demonstrate the richness and diversity of the social landscapes and communities in Canadian urban centres emphasizing changes which occurred in the period from the mid 1960s to the early 1990s The nineteen non technical and integrative essays include reviews of the literature empirical studies and discussions of policy issues CONTENTS Introduction The Social Context and Diversity of Urban Canada David F Ley and Larry S Bourne Part One Patterns People and Place in Urban Canada Evolving Urban Landscapes D W Holdsworth Measuring the Social Ecology of Cities W K D Davies and R A Murdie Demography Living Arrangement and Residential Geography J R Miron Urban Social Behaviour in Time and Space D G Janelle Part Two Contexts Social Structure
