Portney, Ken Thomson, 2002-09-13 In an era when government seems remote and difficult to approach participatory democracy may seem a hopelessly romantic notion Yet nothing is more crucial to the future of American democracy than to develop some way of spurring greater citizen participation In this important book Jeffrey Berry Ken Portney and Ken Thompson examine cities that have created systems of neighborhood government and incorporated citizens in public policymaking Through careful research and analysis the authors find that neighborhood based participation is the key to revitalizing American democracy The Rebirth of Urban Democracy provides a thorough examination of five cities with strong citizen participation programs Birmingham Dayton Portland St Paul and San Antonio In each city the authors explore whether neighborhood associations encourage more people to participate whether these associations are able to promote policy responsiveness on the art of local governments and whether participation in these associations increases the capacity of people to take part in government Finally the authors outline the steps that can be taken to increase political participation in urban America Berry Portney and Thomson show that citizens in participatory programs are able to get their issues on the public agenda and develop a stronger sense of community greater trust in government officials and more confidence in the political system From a rigorous evaluation of surveys and interviews with thousands of citizens and policymakers the authors also find that central governments in these cities are highly responsive to their neighborhoods and that less conflict exists among citizens and policymakers The authors assert that these programs can provide a blueprint for major reform in cities across the

Planting the Grassroots Steven H. Haeberle, 1989 The reasons for the success or failure of neighborhood organizing efforts have been a persistent concern of policymakers and political analysts for decades However most studies of the subject have been limited in their ability to offer generalizations beyond their target area due to the constraints of local conditions or idiosyncratic group histories This volume employs a case study of Birmingham Alabama s successful citizen participation program to examine the dynamics of grassroots political activity and the techniques that are effective in promoting such activity As Haeberle demonstrates the Birmingham neighborhood associations have the same rules structure and reliance on outside assistance and are numerous enough to facilitate statistical analysis thus offering an unusual opportunity to separate some of the long term issues of organizational development from those that are more ephemeral Planting the Grassroots relies on interviews with neighborhood presidents and with city decisionmakers involved in creating the Program archival data collected on participation in neighborhood elections and census data Beginning with an overview of the origins of Birmingham neighborhood activity Haeberle goes on to address the determinants of neighborhood activity and the effects of neighborhood participation He examines why the programs were especially successful in certain neighborhoods how the city structured neighborhood groups to achieve maximum participation and the associations abilities to stimulate activity beyond their own volunteer groups The final section of the book looks at neighborhood organizations in the large context of city politics and especially at the role of the local neighborhood association in dealing with urban race relations Boston University Journal of Science & Technology Law Boston University.
