Plate Tectonics for Curious Kiwis J. J. Aitken, 1996 Institute of Geological & Nuclear Sciences Information Series, 1997 The Rise and Fall of the Southern Alps Glen Coates, 2002 The Southern Alps Ka Tiritiri o te Moana are New Zealand's largest structural feature Running north and south for most of the length of the South Island they cross the Roaring Forties and divide the island into two distinct regions east and west each with its own unique climate landscape and lifeforms In this new book geologist Glen Coates joins with the artist and author Geoffrey Cox to tell how the Alps were formed from ancient marine sediments how they were uplifted to become mountains and how they are being eroded down to produce the spectacular landscape seen today in the South Island Even in just the past few million years vast blocks of land have been shunted incredible distances and today frequent earthquakes remind us that this is a restless part of the earth where mountain building is still in full swing Rivers and glaciers past and present carve out a multitude of valleys and ranges and wide plains have spread out at the mountains feet All this is told in vivid non technical language and copiously illustrated with colour photographs and artwork The result is a book suitable for use in schools and by all who take an interest in their landscape and heritage Rocked and Ruptured J. J. Aitken, 1999 Them rocks they just a keep right on a moving And to cut a geographically eternal story short them earthquakes keep right on a happening New Zealand has more than 150 geological faults that are known to be active many of them twitch repeatedly and around 200 earthquakes a year are big enough to be felt Rocked and Ruptured investigates where New Zealand's main faults lie and explores the consequences of this country's location astride the boundary between two tectonic plates Tectonic forces create the faults and their associated earthquakes and account for New Zealand's volcanoes geothermal activity and mountain chains This book gives comprehensive yet easy to read explanations about how and why faults occur their impact on the environment when they shake and shudder how they are recorded and what past events can tell us about future movements of the earth Julius Haast in the Southern Alps Colin James Burrows, 2005 Julius Haast 1822-87 came to New Zealand late in 1858 to examine the new colony's potential for German immigration He met Ferdinand Hochstetter and joined him on geological and topographic surveys of Auckland and Nelson Provinces an experience that broadened his hobby interest in geology By 1860 he was a competent geologist able to survey the Grey and Buller districts for the Nelson Province and to advise the Canterbury Province on the Lyttelton rail tunnel route through the Port Hills In Canterbury Haast was appointed Provincial Geologist 1861-68 1874-76 founded the Canterbury Museum and was Professor of Geology for Canterbury University College This book illustrated by many of Haast's drawings focuses on his pioneer scientific work in the central Southern Alps Particularly it covers his contributions to topographical and geological mapping and his innovative studies of the glacial geology of the region His German doctorate in science and Austrian and British knighthoods were awarded largely for this work As well as following Haast's journeys and relating his story about the evidence for vast glaciation of the Westland and Canterbury regions chapters of the book

examine the glacial record in the Southern Alps back to the beginning of the Ice Age two and a half million years ago and up to the present day
