Jordan,2002 An examination of the difficulties in fundamentally differentiating humans from all other animals The way in which humans articulate identities social hierarchies and their inversions through relations with animals has been a fruitful topic in anthropological and historical investigations for the last several years The contributors to this volume call attention to the symbolic meanings of animals from the casting of first year students as goats in medieval universities to the representation of vermin as greedy thieves in early modern England But the essays in this volume are also concerned with the more material and bodily aspects of animal human relations like eating regulations aggression and transplanting of animal organs into human beings xenotransplantation Modern biologists have increasingly problematized the human animal boundary Researchers have challenged the supposedly unique ability of humans to use language Chimpanzees and gorillas it has been argued have learned to communicate using American Sign Language In addition some scientists regard the sophistication of modes of communication in species like dolphins and songbirds as undermining the view of humans as uniquely capable of complex expressions As studies of nonhuman primates threaten to compromise the long held assumption that only humans possess self awareness The question becomes How can one firmly differentiate human beings from other animals Contributors include Piers Beirne Richard W Burkhardt Jr Mary E Fissell Paul H Freedman Ruth Mazo Karras Susan E Lederer Rob Meens John H Murrin James A Serpell and H Peter Steeves Angela N H Creager and William Chester Jordan are Associates of the Shelby Cullom Davis Center for Historical Studies Princeton University Studies in Animal and Human Behaviour Konrad Lorenz,1970 The Genesis of Animal Play Gordon M. Power,1999-11-01 Play is a paradox Why would the young of so many species the very animals at greatest risk for injury and predation devote so much time and energy to an activity that by definition has no immediate purpose This question has long puzzled students of animal behavior and has been the focus of considerable empirical investigation and debate In this first comprehensive and state of the art review of what we have learned from decades of research on exploration and play in children and animals Power examines the paradox from all angles Covering solitary activity as well as play with peers siblings and parents he considers the nature development and functions of play as well as the gender differences in early play patterns A major purpose is to explore the relevance of the animal literature for understanding human behavior The nature and amount of children s play varies significantly across cultures so the author makes cross cultural comparisons wherever possible The scope is broad and the range multidisciplinary He draws on studies by developmental researchers in psychology and other fields ethologists anthropologists sociologists sociolinguists early childhood educators and pediatricians And he places research on play in the context of research on such related phenomena as prosocial behavior and aggression Finally Power points out directions for further inquiry and implications for those who work with young children and their parents Researchers and students will find Play and Exploration in Children and Animals an invaluable summary of controversies methods and findings practitioners and educators will find it an invaluable compendium of information relevant to their efforts to enrich play experiences Lessons from life, animal and human.
