The Planning of the Modern City Nelson P. Lewis,2017-10-13 Excerpt from The Planning of the Modern City A Review of the Principles Governing City Planning Subjects will be discussed that are not generally considered as falling within the scope of the engineer s activities but they are all subjects with which one who is responsible for the develop ment of the city plan should be familiar Perhaps the most important characteristic of any design should be its adaptability to altered conditions If this be true with respect to a build ing an industrial plant a railway or shipping terminal which can be enlarged or replaced or even moved to another location it is much more important in the case of the ground plan of a city which cannot be rearranged or transferred to another place There is no undertaking therefore which demands more careful study of what has happened elsewhere what is likely to happen in a particular place and the development of tenden cies which are sure to result in changes in the methods of living and conducting business than the working out of the general plan for a city or for the successive additions to an existing city About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
