Polarized Light In Animal Vision Polarization Patterns In Nature:

Polarized Light in Animal Vision Gábor Horváth, Dezső Varju, 2004-01-12 While the human eye can practically cope only with two aspects of light brightness and colour many animals use polarization as a further source of visual information The text starts with an introduction into imaging polarimetry an efficient technique for measuring light polarization and moves onto a description of the various polarization patterns occurring in nature such as celestial polarization The major part of the book is dedicated to the fascinating question How do animals use polarization patterns Following a compendium of the physiology of polarization sensitivity several case studies are presented such as honeybees or ants using polarized light as a compass or aquatic animals orientating by the underwater polarization Further it is explained how man made objects affecting the natural optical environment may disorientate animals For instance as in the case where oil or glass surfaces can be more attractive for water seeking polarotactic insects than the water surface

Polarized Light in Animal Vision Gábor Horváth, Dezső Varju, 2014-01-15 Polarized Light and Polarization Vision in Animal Sciences Gábor Horváth, 2014-10-30 This book covers advances made since the 2004 Springer volume Polarized Light in Animal Vision edited by Horváth and Varju but also provides reviews and synopses of some areas Part I examines polarization sensitivity across many animal taxa including vertebrates and invertebrates and details both terrestrial and aquatic life Part II is devoted to the description of polarized light in nature and explores how the physics of light must be taken into account when understanding how polarized light is detected by the visual system This includes underwater polarization due to scattering polarization patterns reflected from freshwater bodies polarization characteristics of forest canopies normal and anomalous polarization patterns of the skies skylight polarization transmitted through Snell's window and both linearly and circularly polarized signals produced by terrestrial and aquatic animals This Part also examines polarized light pollution induced by anthropogenic factors such as reflection off asphalt surfaces glass panes car bodies and other man made structures that are now known to form ecological traps for polarotactic insects Part III surveys some of the practical applications of polarization vision including polarization based traps for biting insects ground based polarimetric cloud detectors and an historical examination of the navigational abilities of Viking seafarers using the sky polarization compass The deterrent qualities of ungulate pelage to polarization sensitive biting insects is also examined in this section to teach it Along the same lines one might also say that a pleasant way of learning a subject and at the same time getting to know quite a few of the workers active in it is to arrange and to attend an Advanced Study Institute ASI or a workshop lasting about two weeks This was and is the wisdom behind the NA TO ASI programme and much as people fear that a fortnight may be too long before it is over everyone feels that it was too short especially if the weather had cooperated Organising this ASI which resulted in this volume has been a very good learning experience I started my career in research with invertebrates and retained an interest in them over the years due to my teaching a course and working sporadically on various aspects of photoreception in Polychaetes Crustaceans and Insects Thus the thought of organising an ASI on photoreception and vision in invertebrates had been brewing in my mind for the past half a dozen years or so It was felt that it will be desirable to do a bit of stock taking and discuss possible new approaches to the study of this matter
