'Domestic' Violence Susan S. M. Edwards, 2025-01-06 Violence in the home particularly assault by a man on his wife or girlfriend is an everyday phenomenon What should the police and law courts do about it In Policing Domestic Violence first published in 1989 reissued here with a new preface Susan Edwards draws upon her extensive research into their actual responses both before and after recent initiatives towards reform at the time to address the practical and theoretical issues for criminology and feminism Examining police and court practice the author exposes the ways in which the patriarchal ideology enshrined in the law and the masculine ethos of the police and legal profession ensure that women receive less justice and less protection She documents in detail the processes by which crimes against women are trivialized The book combines a review of international research with the author's own five year exploration of policing in the UK through interviews with officers observation and a review of record keeping practice It covers the introduction of new policing policies and offers a preliminary assessment of their success together with practical proposals for the future At a theoretical level this title addresses the key problems of criminality and punishment Is it possible to reconcile the feminist critique of the marginalization of so called domestic violence with the radical critique of the punitive system as oppressive and counterproductive Does the protection of women justify infringement of family privacy The book should be read in its historical context by students of criminology law women s studies and sociology as well as those concerned with policies and practical measures for dealing with violence in the home

BOOK JACKET Policing Domestic Violence

Lawrence W. Sherman, Janell D. Schmidt, Dennis P. Rogan, 1992 Domestic conflict is the largest single cause of violence in America yet police have traditionally been reluctant to make arrests for such assaults In the past decade however that reluctance has been overcome with a 70% increase in arrests for minor assaults heavily concentrated among low income and minority groups Spearheading this nationwide crackdown are the 15 states and the District of Columbia which have adopted unprecedented statutes mandating arrest in cases of misdemeanor domestic battery In Policing Domestic Violence criminologist Lawrence Sherman confronts the tough questions raised by this controversial approach to a complex social problem How should police respond to the millions of domestic violence cases they confront each year when most prosecutors refuse to pursue them Why does arresting unemployed batterers do more harm than good What approaches should police adopt when arrest has totally opposite effects upon haves and have nots Sherman a leading police researcher is the architect of the 1984 Minneapolis Domestic Violence Experiment the first controlled test of the effects of arrest on repeat crime Here he describes what was learned from a multi year federal research program to repeat the experiment in Milwaukee Miami Colorado Springs Omaha and Charlotte The results are both surprising and provocative In fact arrest deters selectively Sherman found that it effectively inhibits some offenders but incites more violence in others It may also deter batterers for a month or so only to make them more violent later on Under this policy therefore some women exchange short term safety for a longer term increase in danger Sherman also shows that compulsory arrest reduces violence against middle class women at the expense of those often black who are poor Some advocates of the policy have endorsed this moral choice but Sherman argues that domestic violence will continue in spite of and sometimes because of our attempts to stop it Further while it is possible to predict which couples will continue to suffer abusive behavior it has been difficult to find effective ways of preventing chronic violence even when arrests are made Relying on arrest as a fix for domestic abuse only underscores the long neglect of underlying social problems and Sherman calls instead for more flexible policies such as community policing that more adequately reflect the diversity of American society BOOK JACKET Title Summary field provided by Blackwell North America Inc All Rights Reserved Policing Domestic Violence Camille Lavery Preston, 2000

Innovations in Policing Domestic Violence J. W. E. Sheptycki, 1993 This study examines police reform efforts in the domestic violence area of policework taking account of the issues and debates about police organization Targeting Domestic Abuse with Police Data Matthew P. Bland, Barak Ariel, 2020-09-29 This book explores the potential of domestic abuse data to assess the level of harm caused to victims and the amount of resources required to respond to it Policing domestic abuse has become a major activity for the police service in England and Wales Part of the police strategy is to gather hundreds of thousands of detailed records about victims and suspects the single largest set of domestic abuse records available but one that to date has largely unexplored by researchers In this volume Matthew Bland and Barak Ariel analyse three substantial datasets taken from police forces across the country and ask Can police data be used to derive meaningful insight How should we use these data to measure harm Just how much domestic abuse involves a repeat victim Does abuse get more serious over time Can serious domestic abuse be predicted before it occurs This volume illustrates the scale of the challenge the police and other agencies face with reducing domestic abuse A small proportion of individuals generate a majority of harm this book argues that police records offer opportunities to identify these individuals before the harm occurs Demonstrating that statistical techniques can be used to profile domestic abuse to target harm reduction strategies more precisely and even identify a sizable proportion of serious cases before they occur this volume will be of interest to law enforcement officials policing researchers and policy makers interested in reducing the phenomenon of domestic abuse

Negotiating Domestic Violence Carolyn Hoyle, 1998 This book examines the factors which shape the criminal justice response to domestic violence in the light of policy changes at the beginning of the 1990s which aimed to increase arrest rates In particular the book discusses the needs and expectations of victims and examines how their choices impact on decisions made by police and prosecutors Many books on the criminal justice response to domestic violence start from the premise that withdrawal of complaints by victims and the subsequent discontinuance of cases represents some kind of failure on the part of the agencies involved and that victims would benefit from greater determination by police to prosecute offenders wherever possible Implicit in this approach is the assumption that the criminal justice system as it presently operates is capable of responding effectively to the needs of victims of domestic violence This book throws doubt on the validity of these assumptions

Policing Domestic Violence in the 1990s Sharon Grace, 1995

Policing Domestic Violence, 2018 This review examines what is known about the policing of domestic violence It covers six domains of police involvement in domestic violence workforce development reporting to police first response prevention of further domestic violence investigative responses and charging of perpetrators A systematic search of 10 literature databases with targeted follow up searches identified 346 eligible studies Findings indicate that police can influence the likelihood of further violence victim satisfaction and wellbeing and criminal justice outcomes Improvements to the policing of domestic violence should focus on optimising the implementation and effectiveness of police responses specifically targeting responses at the incidents victims and perpetrators where they are likely to have the greatest impact developing the workforce embracing new technologies and innovative approaches minimising bureaucratic or administrative barriers to effective police responses and working closely with victims

Sheelan, 2000 Family Violence and Police

Response Marijke Malsch, Wilma Smeenk, 2017-07-05 Police response to incidents of intimate partner violence can be critical This volume investigates the elements in the institutional legal and organizational context that are relevant for police response to incidents in the realm of the private sphere and whether there exists a relation with the reporting of such incidents by victims Addressing this complex question requires insights from research policy and practice and as such any conclusions will have implications for each of these fields This volume addresses issues that are key elements in the relationship between the legal response to family violence and the reporting by victims These issues concern societal and legal definitions of family violence employed in research policy making and legal practice how the legislation of various countries covers violence in the private sphere the way the police deal with reported incidents of intimate partner violence and the role that other interventions play in the response to and combat of family violence and intimate partner violence

Women, Policing, and Male Violence (Routledge Revivals) Jalna Hanmer, Jill Radford, Elizabeth Stanko, 2013-10-14 First published in 1989 this book focuses on the policing of male violence against women It is an issue that has been criticised substantially in the past and the book shows how even police themselves have sometimes admitted that women have received inadequate treatment The book includes contributions from North America Australia and Western Europe and looks at different approaches that have been taken by states in intervening into the violence of men against women Chapters explore
