Political Realism, Freud, and Human Nature in International Relations Robert Schuett, 2010-05-15. In the tradition of political realism, this book provides an important reappraisal of the concept of human nature in contemporary realist international political theory. With special reference to the anthropology of Sigmund Freud, a consequential yet terribly neglected and underestimated thinker in International Relations, Schuett demonstrates that analytical and normative theorizing of all international political reality, its nature, tragedies and potentialities, requires a sophisticated theory of human nature. Developing a Freudian philosophical anthropology for political realism, he argues for the careful resurrection of the concept of human nature in the wider study of international relations. Political Psychology Christopher J.

Robert Jervis has been a pioneering leader in the study of the psychology of international politics for more than four decades. How Statesmen Think presents his most important ideas on the subject from across his career This collection of revised and updated essays applies elaborates and modifies his pathbreaking work The result is an indispensable book for students and scholars of international relations How Statesmen Think demonstrates that expectations and political and psychological needs are the major drivers of perceptions in international politics as well as in other arenas Drawing on the increasing attention psychology is paying to emotions the book discusses how emotional needs help structure beliefs It also shows how decision makers use multiple shortcuts to seek and process information when making foreign policy and national security judgments For example the desire to conserve cognitive resources can cause decision makers to look at misleading indicators of military strength and psychological pressures can lead them to run particularly high risks The book also looks at how deterrent threats and counterpart promises often fail because they are misperceived How Statesmen Think examines how these processes play out in many situations that arise in foreign and security policy including the threat of inadvertent war the development of domino beliefs the formation and role of national identities and conflicts between intelligence organizations and policymakers

Power and Principle in International Affairs Gordon Clark Schloming, 1991      Perception and Misperception in International Politics, 1976 This study of perception and misperception in foreign policy was a landmark in the application of cognitive psychology to political decision making The New York Times called it in an article published nearly ten years after the book's appearance the seminal statement of principles underlying political psychology The perspective established by Jervis remains an important counterpoint to structural explanations of international politics and from it has developed a large literature on the psychology of leaders and the problems of decision making under conditions of incomplete information stress and cognitive bias Jervis begins by describing the process of perception for example how decision makers learn from history and then explores common forms of misperception such as overestimating one's influence Finally he tests his ideas through a number of important events in international relations from nineteenth and twentieth century European history
