

Police Search Powers in NSW

What Police Can and Can't Do Without a Warrant

Police in NSW can conduct ordinary, frisk, and strip searches without a warrant based on reasonable suspicion of certain offences or prohibited items.

Daoud Legal

CRIMINAL DEFENCE & TRAFFIC LAWYERS

Reasonable suspicion must have a factual basis and be formed before the search begins, not during or after.

Police can seize stolen goods, prohibited drugs, crime-related items, and dangerous articles found during a search.

Searches must be conducted with respect for privacy and dignity, by officers of the same sex, and with special protections for children and vulnerable people.

Police must inform individuals of the reason for the search and their rights, but consent is not required if reasonable suspicion exists.

Individuals have the right to know why they are being searched and can later challenge the lawfulness of the search.

Police cannot forcibly search body cavities, use excessive force, or conduct searches during questioning.

Strip searches are subject to strict limitations and cannot involve physical contact or searching genital areas without specific suspicion.

Improper or unlawful searches can lead to evidence being excluded from court and potential legal action against police.

If you believe your rights were violated during a police search, you can make a complaint to the Law Enforcement Conduct Commission or seek legal advice.
