Developmental perspective on trauma Martine Delfos, 2014-07-07 In Developmental Perspective on Trauma Martine Delfos presents a new model on trauma The effect of traumatic events depends on many factors biological as well as psychological factors Until now research has mainly focused on the age related symptoms in psychological well being in reaction to trauma a developmental perspective on effect instead of formation The factor that has not been taken into account yet is the impact of the child developmental stage itself on the perception of traumatic events This concerns the way trauma influences the performance of the developmental tasks a formative developmental perspective A frame of reference that has developed in adults is often still lacking in children Children will not always be traumatised by the same events as adults and children can be deeply traumatised by events that adults will not consider traumatising because of their knowledge of the world leading to a more mature perspective In the model presented the characteristics of the development with its developmental tasks the development of the brain with its growing connectivity are applied to traumatic experiences to account for developmental differences in reaction to trauma The model is applied to different traumatic experiences like sexual abuse and war trauma A better understanding of the effect of traumatic experiences on children and adolescents is to be expected when the true developmental perspective is taken into account

Psychotherapy offers an opportunity for healing by restoring mentalizing that is fostering psychological attunement in the context of secure attachment relationships in the psychotherapy relationship and in other attachment relationships The book gives a unique overview of common attachment patterns in childhood and adulthood setting the stage for understanding attachment trauma which is most conspicuous in maltreatment but also more subtly evident in early and repeated failures of attunement in attachment relationships

Originally a narrow specialty within emergency medicine the field now extends to trauma psychology military psychiatry and behavioral health post traumatic stress and stress disorders trauma social work disaster mental health and most recently the subfield of history and trauma with sociohistorical examination of long term effects and meanings of major traumas experienced by whole communities and nations both natural Pompeii Hurricane Katrina and man made the Holocaust 9 11. One reason for this expansion involves important scientific breakthroughs in detecting the neurobiology of trauma that is connecting biology with human behavior which in turn is applicable to all fields involving human thought and response including but not limited to psychiatry medicine and the health sciences the social and behavioral sciences the humanities and law. Researchers within these fields and more can contribute to a universal understanding of immediate and long term consequences both good and bad of trauma both for individuals and for broader communities and institutions. Trauma encyclopedias published to date all center around psychological trauma and its emotional effects on the individual as a disabling or mental disorder requiring mental health services. This element is vital and has benefited from scientific and professional breakthroughs in theory research and applications. Our encyclopedia certainly will cover this central element but our expanded conceptualization will include the other disciplines and will move beyond the individual.
