Die Durchführung eines Digital Detox führt bei Digital Natives zu einem Perspektivenwechsel und einer Bewusstseins-schaffung über die digitale Abhängigkeit. Alle untersuchten Personen berichten, den Vorsatz gefasst zu haben, ihr Smartphone in Zukunft weniger und bewusster nutzen zu wollen. Due to the fast moving age of digitalization digital technologies seem to have become an essential part in our daily life. Simultaneously the counter trend digital detox is becoming more and more prominent. Digital Detox describes the conscious decision to take a break from using digital devices for a limited time. This thesis evaluates the expectations, opportunities and challenges of digital natives which experience digital detox. In addition it analyzes adaptations which participants were willing to integrate in terms of their future usage after the detoxification process. In order to find answers to the research questions a multi methods approach consisting of a literature review, quasi experimental study, online content analysis and self experiment is conducted. The results indicate that detox participants struggle to gather information as well as communicating with their social environment. Furthermore the absence of the smartphone can lead to mental stress such as loneliness, restlessness and the feeling of missing out (FOMO). Moreover going through digital detox while encountering a crisis like the global lockdown due to the Covid 19 pandemic represents yet an additional challenge. In contrast digital detox offers the opportunity to question individual digital consumption. Respondents state that they were more productive, relaxed, less stressed and overall more mindful. Additionally digital detox benefits their physical health as they feel more active and less tired due to a better sleep. The absence of the smartphone has also positive effects on their social environment. Without distraction caused by smartphones conversations could be followed more easily. Digital detox leads to a change in perspectives and also raises awareness about internet addiction. All participants state that they intend to use their digital devices less and more consciously in the future.
