

The Treatment of Primary Hypertension Using Plum Blossom Needle Therapy

Abstract

The purpose of this study was to evaluate the efficacy of seven star plum blossom needle therapy on a patient with primary hypertension. Although conventional treatment of primary hypertension with medications is frequently successful, many of these drugs produce harmful side effects, so there is a demand for efficient and safe alternative methods of regulating blood pressure. The patient in this case was a 35-year-old Caucasian male who had suffered from chronic hypertension since the age of 30, with a 40-year history of smoking and a 30-year history of heavy alcohol consumption. The patient also suffered from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) and reported palpitations and shortness of breath on exertion. A seven star plum blossom needle hammer was used to stimulate various acupuncture points twice a week for six weeks. The patient's blood pressure was evaluated before and after treatment during the six-week treatment period and during a subsequent 19-day monitoring period. This resulted in a reduction in both systolic and diastolic blood pressure over the six-week period, which was sustained during the 19-day follow up. The authors conclude that seven star plum blossom needle hammer therapy effectively lowered the patient's blood pressure to pre-hypertensive values, and that the efficacy and safety of this treatment method should be further evaluated in a larger controlled clinical trial.

Introduction

According to the Center of Disease Control, 33 per cent of adults over the age of 20 suffer from hypertension in the United States.¹ There are two types of hypertension: primary or essential hypertension accounts for 95 per cent of cases and is idiopathic; secondary hypertension is associated with preexisting conditions such as renal disease, endocrine disorders, cardiovascular disease (CVD) and neurologic disorders.² According to Robbins and Cotran: Pathologic Basis of Disease, hypertension is considered to be a chronic elevation of blood pressure for a duration of at least six months.³ Many hypertensive individuals can be asymptomatic for years. Since primary hypertension is asymptomatic and often easily manageable with treatment, it is considered benign hypertension. However, hypertension is a contributing factor to CVD, cerebrovascular accident (CVA), aortic dissection and renal failure,² and is therefore often referred to as the "silent killer". Roughly 95 per cent of the cases of primary hypertension are considered benign while the remaining five per cent of cases manifest as malignant hypertension, which involves a rapidly rising blood pressure over 200/120 mmHg.² If these individuals remain untreated, death usually ensues within one to two years.² See Table 1 for the diagnostic criteria for hypertension.

Diagnosis	Systolic	Diastolic
Normal	120 mmHg or less	80 mmHg or less
Prehypertension	120-139 mmHg	80-89 mmHg
Hypertension Stage 1	140-159 mmHg	90-99 mmHg
Hypertension Stage 2	160 mmHg or greater	100 mmHg or greater

Table 1: Diagnostic criteria for hypertension

Aetiology

There are many predisposing factors to hypertension, including chronic stress, smoking, poor diet, sedentary lifestyle, renal, thyroid, cardiovascular and adrenal disease, ethnicity and psychogenic factors.² Genetic contribution to the development of hypertension is rare and is attributed to a defect in a single gene that alters the amount of sodium reabsorbed by the kidneys, causing an increase in water retention and thus blood volume and pressure.² Environmental factors such as smoking, poor diet and lifestyle can adversely affect vascular smooth muscle, leading to vasoconstriction. Vasoconstriction increases peripheral resistance, which elevates blood pressure. Chronically elevated blood pressure can lead to damage to the vascular walls and the development of atherosclerosis. Damage to the arterial walls can attract LDL cholesterol, which adheres to the site of

Western Medicine as seen today has a strong scientific basis in its development The pathogenesis of most diseases and their symptomatology and physical signs are well studied and understood The management of patients is based on firm understanding of these disease processes In contrast Traditional Chinese Medicine came about through the experience of many generations of practitioners over thousands of years Undoubtedly many of these treatments have proved to be effective in their own way however firm scientific basis is still lacking While most Western Medicine advocates control of disease by eradication of pathogens and surgical removal of diseased organs as in the case of cancer Traditional Chinese Medicine seeks to improve resistance against disease There is probably a great wealth of therapeutic value in Traditional Chinese Medicine which has not been discovered or explored fully By combining the knowledge of both Western and Traditional Chinese Medicine one might be able to improve the results of efficacy of treatments and the survival of patients The integration of Medicine from East and West will take time to evolve and will need interested physicians from different parts of the world to work closely together to realize such a possibility This book is an attempt to bridge the medical world of two great and ancient civilizations in their approach to the treatment of disease It is informative with a detailed account of the history of medical development It is highly recommended for those medical practitioners from both East and West who are interested to explore alternative medicine and research new areas of the medical frontier The Massage Therapy of Traditional Chinese Medicine Xizhen Cao,1985
