Learning Rates of Electric Vehicles Andreas Zerfaß, 2017-07-25 Governments of many countries consider the electrification of individual passenger transport as a suitable strategy to decrease oil dependency and reduce transport related carbon dioxide CO<sub>2</sub> and air pollutant emissions However battery electric vehicles BEVs and plug in hybrid electric vehicles PHEVs have been more expensive than their conventional counterparts and suffer from relatively short electric driving ranges which still hampers the market potential of these vehicles Despite persisting shortfalls mechanisms such as technological learning and economics of scale promise to improve the techno economic performance of BEVs and PHEVs in the short to mid term Here the author seeks to obtain insight into the techno economic prospects of BEVs and PHEVs by i establishing experience curves and ii quantifying user costs and the costs of mitigating carbon dioxide and air pollutant emissions in a time series analysis The analysis captures the situation in Germany between 2010 and 2016 Electric vehicles roll-out in Europe Friðrik Már Baldursson, Ewa Lazarczyk Carlson, Nils-Henrik M. von der Fehr, 2019-10-16 This report provides a timely contribution to the search for concrete responses on how to successfully complete and manage the roll out of electric vehicles in Europe For this purpose the report presents case studies of three countries Norway and the Netherlands where market penetration of electric vehicles is already comparatively high as well as Luxembourg which is an interesting case from a regulatory perspective The Three Case Studies Norway has some unique characteristics that are important for the study of how electric vehicles affect the electricity system On the one hand the penetration of electric vehicles is higher in Norway than anywhere else in Europe On the other hand thanks to the availability of cheap hydropower the Norwegian electricity system has been designed to support electric space heating in a cold climate Hence it has been able to accommodate high levels of electric vehicle penetration even with relatively light handed regulation on location and capacity of charging infrastructure The unique characteristics of Norway make it difficult to generalise its experience Nevertheless it does suggest that electric vehicles can be accommodated by electricity systems given reasonable levels of penetration and sufficient time to respond to the resulting demand for electricity The Netherlands already has a well developed network of charging points The base for charging is provided by private charging points either at home or at work Semi public chargers with limited access are also an important category that is growing quickly Public chargers are often deployed through a demand driven approach and this method of providing charging infrastructure where there is not enough private parking and therefore a lack of private charging is an option used particularly in cities The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg is a small still developing system in terms of the number of electric vehicles Luxembourg has organised the development of its charging infrastructure centrally and the main public charging network is owned by distribution companies Due to its location the Duchy cooperates with the Netherlands and Belgium to facilitate the usage of electric vehicles in the region so that users of electric vehicles can charge their cars in any station belonging to the three networks

Looking at the three cases Luxembourg has taken a somewhat different approach to creating a charging infrastructure for electric vehicles than the other two countries studied. There responsibility for ensuring the deployment of the necessary infrastructure has been vested with electricity network companies who have produced a comprehensive national scheme based on public tenders to ensure a timely rollout. Given the relatively low numbers of both electric vehicles and charging points in the country to date it is however not yet clear how well this approach is working especially compared to the alternative pursued in the Netherlands and Norway. Both the Netherlands and Norway have adopted more decentralised approaches to charging infrastructure. However in both countries such infrastructure has developed in line with the fleet of electric vehicles and charging facilities do not seem to be an obstacle to further growth of the fleet. The Norwegian experience is perhaps of particular interest given the unusually high penetration of electric vehicles there. The fact that distribution networks are guaranteed financing of necessary upgrades from users has clearly played a part in facilitating the connection of charging points. The Netherlands has developed more of a bottom up approach to account for the fact that a large proportion of people live in multi home dwellings without access to a garage or a private parking space. Policy implications: For the rise of electric vehicles to go smoothly it is crucial that the right incentives and market structures be in place. One of the challenges for distribution system operators is to ensure that charging mostly takes place during off peak hours. Time of use pricing is a possible option for shifting general demand for charging at or near homes from peak to off peak hours. However this may not suffice to solve the localised problems in distribution networks. A change in regulation rather than a change in the tariff and pricing structure could be more appropriate in certain cases. Electric vehicles or rather their batteries could also potentially provide important storage and flexibility in a decarbonised energy system based in large part on renewable energy sources. While time of use tariffs and pricing or command and control regulation would be the appropriate tools to shift charging demand to off peak hours they will not be sufficient to exploit the full potential of electric vehicles as storage. One challenge in this regard is simply having enough charging or de charging points for parked vehicles.

This book addresses major economic problems affecting the United States and proposes policy reforms to target them. The authors use a broad survey of economic research to conduct an evidence based assessment of four economic issues affecting the US and other developed nations: slowing economic growth, unsustainable public debt, increases in wage inequality and climate change. Finding that the problems are interconnected and should be dealt with in a comprehensive manner, the authors explain how current policies have contributed to the issues and make recommendations on policy reforms. All four issues are examined in one place and the resulting policy recommendations form a consistent plan to mediate the problems simultaneously. Providing a comprehensive approach to some of economic policy's most difficult problems, this book will be an excellent resource for students and researchers interested in macroeconomic theory, public sector economics, international economics, labor economics and environmental economics.
